Boxes Hearrs. -- If men, my dears, were to pay, like servants, for everything they broke, they wouldn't be so fond of breaking their hearts for every pretty girl they saw. The fortune of a Rothschild couldn't stand, my dears, against such a ruinous amount of breakages. Why, I have known a man's heart break as often as an America bank, and yet he would open the next day with the same brass plate on his face, on which you could plainly read "Assurance," and his heart would go on issuring the same amount of false notes as before Bendes, what becomes of all their broken hearts, I should like to know? Where do they all go to? Along with old moons, I suppose; or they may be keeping company, their's no knowing where, with all the pins that are lost, each heart being stuck through with a ping like the curious insects in a mus-

Scientific American has an engenving of the Railroad which is to run a hundred miles an hour with perfect safety. Its distinctive principle is that the cars run on a single track for the train to be hung upon it. The train is, in fact, placed a straddle of the rail, running on wheels, to whose axies the cars are hung. It is obvious that, with the rail running, as it were, through the car, the latter could not be thrown off the track by any amount of speed, and no obstruction of sufficient magnitude to do mischief could be made to lay upon a single rail raised six or eight feet from the ground.
