This carried me through a solitary region, with marshes stretching as far as the eye could see, covered with tall reeds. There was no habitation, nor aught that betokened the presence of man. It was just possible that I was the first human being who had ever found a stream. It was just possible that I was the carbines cocked to blow out my brains. In the man and tottered down beside it. What could I eat? The ibis. I think I had rowed some three miles marshy around the shores, and full of alligators. I saw their ugly forms and long ligators. I saw their ugly forms and long serrated backs, as they floated about in all parts of it, hungrily hunting for fish, and eating one another; but all this was combined. and eating one another; but all this was nothing new, for I had witnessed similar scenes during the whole of my excursion creatures are even more wary than the let was magnified by refraction, I fancied crocodil'de, the giant lizards—they were for a long time they were flamingous alligators.

The stench had grown intolerable. There was not a breath of air stirring, for a long time they were flamingoes. alligators. This fancy was dissipated as I drew near.

There were a dozen of them in all. These were balancing themselves, as in their usual habit, on one leg, apparently asleep, or buried in deep thought. They were on the upper extermity of the islet, while I was approach ing it from below. It was not above sixty yards across; and I could only reach the point nearest me, I knew my gun would throw shot to kill at that distance.

The outlines of the hills, like the blade of a and many were they in number—a hundard and many were they in sumber and hundard with the feath around it, was impregnated with the fild effect of the dill with and off. I had the gratification to the point nearest me, I knew my gun would throw shot to kill at that distance. I feared the stroke of the sculls would start them, and I pulled slowly and cautiously. Perhaps the great heat—for it was as hot a day as I can remember—had rendered them torpid or lazy. Whether or not, they sat still until the cut-water of my skiff touched the bank of the islet. I drew my gun up cautiously, took aim, and fired both barrels almost simultaneously. When the smoke cleared out of my eyes, I saw that all the birds had flown off except one, that lay stretched served as the point nearest me, I knew my gun water.

The incident in some measure revived me. I saw that I was not alone: there was company even in the crocodiles, if I inflated them? Yes, yes! buoys and bladders, floats and life-preservers! that was company even in the crocodiles, and that would open the alligator, or its intestines—what if I inflated them?
