

POOR DOCUMENT

Cetewayo.

HIS MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

The St. James' Gazette says that on his arrival in London Cetewayo received no visitors, but retired shortly after midnight. On the party reaching their bedrooms, however, it was found that the apartments, which had been arranged according to English notions of comfort, were unsuited to native requirements, and a rearranging reducing the sleeping accommodation to the level of the Zulu idea of comfort was realized. Cetewayo and his party were conveyed from Southampton in a special train, which proceeded at a rate which completely astonished Cetewayo and his companions. They placed their fingers in their ears and gazed stupefied if not with alarm. The beauty of the country exceeded Cetewayo's expectations. "If," he said, "I could only live in a country like this I should want for nothing more on earth." The cattle attracted attention, and he frequently expressed his surprise that after feeding on such soil our herds did not become so fat as to be unable to rise. Later, he exclaimed that we were like ants—we swarmed; and he added: "Why ever did a nation so grand, a people so numerous, make a war upon a man so little as the Zulu? Why did you not ask me to run away—to get out of Zululand? That would have been noble of you and kind to me."

HIS VOYAGE FROM THE CAPE.

A correspondent who was on board the vessel with Cetewayo from Madeira to Plymouth, gives the following narrative of the voyage: Although the weather was fine during the journey from Cape Town to Madeira, Cetewayo and his attendants suffered for a short time from sea sickness. The first to board the Arad in Funchal Bay were the Portuguese customs officials. The chief official inspected His Majesty gravely and in silence. Cetewayo gazed at the official somewhat disdainfully and muttered something to Ungoengwana which drove him into a paroxysm of laughter, and this ran through the entire Zulu group. Grapes, cigars, peaches and invitations to smoke and drink were among the peace offerings made to Cetewayo by the many visitors; but while the grapes and peaches were accepted by a bow or a smile, the cigars and liquor were declined. The accommodations assigned to the King and suite on board the Arad was sufficient, and in every sense admirable. The ex-King, his cousin, and two counsellors dined together in the saloon, and they occupied a table which at their own request was set apart exclusively for their use. The Zulus had peculiarities in their diet. At breakfast they began with their beefsteaks, and finished with porridge. They have learned the use of the knife and fork, but they have not quite accustomed themselves to walking up stairs.

ETIQUETTE.

Cetewayo enjoyed strict observance of etiquette, a breach of which by his suite he would not suffer. During the run from Madeira he invariably entered first at meal times. The same rule was observed when the party left the table. The ex-King chatted pleasantly to all and inquired after their bodily condition. When Cetewayo declined to receive a visitor his pleasure was conveyed in the brief exclamation, "the King sleeps." Cetewayo occasionally attended divine service during the voyage. On one occasion he arose in the midst of the service and muttering "Let us go," walked from the saloon, followed, of course, by his faithful chiefs. The ex-King believes that his visit to England is merely preliminary to his restoration to Zululand.

The Kenwood Convent, near the Hudson River, about two miles below Albany, has recently been supplied with the telephone. One of the sisters invited the Superioress to test it. After persuasion the Superioress consented, and was told by the sisters to say "Hello," and put the handpiece to her ear. Turning to the sister she remarked:—"I am surprised to hear you make use of such a word." "But it is necessary, mother; it is the one used in calling up the central office." No sooner had the Superioress entered the word than she turned to the sister with fear and said: "Why a man is talking to me." The young fellow in the central office heard the exclamation, and was ready with the reply: "Yes, ma'am, it is a man, but he is two miles away." The answer was too good to keep, and the Superioress told it to the sisters, who all joined in a hearty laugh.

The Zulu King Cetewayo, and companions, could not adapt themselves to the luxurious sleeping apartments provided for them on their arrival in London, and made up their couches on the floor. The beauty of the country excited Cetewayo's expectations. "If," he said, "I could only live in a country like this I should want for nothing more on this earth." The cattle attracted his attention and he frequently expressed his surprise that after feeding on such soil the herds did not become so fat as to be unable to rise. Later, he exclaimed that the English were like ants—they swarmed; and he added, "Why ever did a nation so grand, a people so numerous, make war upon a man so little as the Zulu? Why did you not ask me to run away—to get out of Zululand? That would have been noble of you and kind to me!"

Mohammed's Success.

The causes which led to Mohammed's success will be best understood by taking a rapid glance at the condition of Arabia about the time of his birth. It must be borne in mind that a vague belief in one God existed among the Arab tribes long before that event. Nor must it be forgotten that the Arabs and Jews were kindred races, speaking kindred languages and having kindred customs, practices, and prejudices. Driven out of their own land at successive epochs by Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, many Jewish tribes settled in Arabia; and when the Roman Empire became Christianized, colonies of Christians also scattered everywhere, found their way into the Arabian peninsula, causing much mutual attrition and interchange of thought between Jews, Christians, and Arabs. Occasionally Arab tribes were thus converted to the faith of the colonists. Unhappily, both the Judaism and Christianity imported in this way into the country were of a debased character. They were not very much better than the forms of religion already prevalent among the Arab tribes. Even the doctrine of God's unity had been tampered with and corrupted. No creed worthy of the name of religion existed anywhere in Arabia. Tritheism, polytheism, sabism, adoration of he sun and planets, idolatry, fetishism, animal worship, plant worship, stone worship, superstitions of the grossest kind, were rife in various parts of the Arabian peninsula. Nowhere, except in the heart of a few of the more intelligent and thoughtful, were any true ideas of God still cherished. It was under such circumstances, and amid such surroundings, that Mohammed, "the praised one" (as his name signifies), was born at Mecca about A. D. 570. His father, Abdullah, died before his birth, and his mother, Aminah, when he was six years old. Yet he enjoyed one great advantage, notwithstanding his orphaned condition. He had not to waste time and energy in pushing his way upward from obscurity. His grandfather, Abd-ul-Muttalib, who adopted him, belonged to the Arabian aristocracy. He was of the noble family of Hashim, of the Kuresh tribe, and was the appointed guardian of the Kaaba or sacred temple at Mecca, a small cube-shaped stone building which had existed as a sacred edifice for more centuries previously. The guardianship of this temple was regarded as the highest honor to which any family could aspire, the belief being that it was originally erected by Abraham over the spot where he was about to sacrifice Isaac. On the death of the grandfather of Mohammed, while he was still a boy, his uncle, Abu Talib, became his guardian, and during all his difficulties never deserted him. His family, though noble, was poor, and the boy Mohammed was obliged to earn his livelihood by tending sheep in the wilderness. Thus from his earliest years he resembled his great prototype, Moses, who had to act as shepherd to his father-in-law Jethro. It was not until Mohammed was twenty-five years of age that he married his rich kinswoman Khadijah. She was a widow, who had acquired great wealth by trading transactions, and was fifteen years his senior. She had entrusted the management of her affairs to Mohammed, and, having found him eminently trustworthy, gave proof of her gratitude by offering him her hand. It is remarkable that he remained faithful to her till her death, which did not occur till his fifty-first year.—Nineteenth Century.

OFFICIAL LIFE IN IRELAND.—Lord Spencer must lead a terrible life at the Viceregal Lodge. He is, in fact, very much in the position of the Czar of Russia. All visitors are watched closely from the moment they enter the Phoenix Park gates until they arrive at the Viceregal Lodge door. Mounted policemen patrol the avenues, and roads of the park, detectives lurk in the bushes, soldiers who had acquired great wealth by trading transactions, and was fifteen years his senior. She had entrusted the management of her affairs to Mohammed, and, having found him eminently trustworthy, gave proof of her gratitude by offering him her hand. It is remarkable that he remained faithful to her till her death, which did not occur till his fifty-first year.—Nineteenth Century.
