ANNABEL

OR— THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE BATTLE AT THE SETTLEMENT.

At last with a crash a breach was made and uttering yells of triumph the Indians burst in, Sam Lorton and Gomez at their head.

Jerry, with bitterness of spirit, had seen that this must shortly happen, and instructed his followers, when it occurred, to retire fighting to the strongest of their erections, where the women and children were collected, and there to die defending their wives and little ones.

The defenders had reached the wall of the building where the women and children were huddled, trembling and terror-stricken, and had set their backs against it to maintain the last vain struggle, when the babel of sound was suddenly augmented by the tremendous war-whoops of the Cherokees; and at the same moment they burst through the gap in the palisade and precipitated themselves with wildest vehemence on the astonished Chickasaws.

The latter were for a moment paralysed with amazement, and stood gazing in stupid consternation. Then recognizing in the new comers their deadliest foes, they rallied with an answering whoop of defiance, and strove to meet the unexpected assault.

The positions of the combatants was now peculiar but easily described. The Chickasaws being all within the palisade when the Cherokees got forward, the latter poured in like waves till the enclosure was almost full, leaving little room to fight and no way of escape. The Chickasaws were thus placed between the Cherokees and the whites, whom they had the moment before hemmed in, and were thus exposed to assault both before and behind.

The unexpected arrival which had given dismay to Chickasaws gave hope to the hearts of the settlers, producing a wild, almost delicious joy out of the bosom of their despair. Their air of silent resolute defiance was changed into shouts of triumph, and inspired with new strength, they flung themselves forth on those who confronted them, as their allies assailed them from the other side.

Philip was among the very foremost of the fighters, and, with Steve on one side and Jim on the other, directed his way to where Jerry fought against his special foes, Sam Lorton and Gomez.

These worthies were so much amazed at the coming of aid to the settlers as the redskins had been, and had also paused for a moment in irresolute astonishment till the blazing light showed Philip and his two companions. Then they understood only too well what it meant, and how their personal concerns were doubly perilled. Sam Lorton absolutely gasped his teeth with rage, for by the efforts Philip was making to press forward, and the significant look which he was casting on himself, the tool of Bernard Hayes knew that the youth had full suspicion of his object and purpose, and was fully alive to the necessity of securing the safety of Jerry Just. They read each other's thoughts in their faces, and that so clearly that it mattered little though no words could pass between them.

Sam's brutal face became fearfully contorted with passion, and clenching his two hands upon the weapon with which he was fighting, he made a maddened rush in the direction of Jerry, resolved on destroying him ere the youth could ask him the all important question.

The impetuosity with which he flung himself forward was not to be resisted. One or two settlers were between him and Jerry, but they were overborne by the shock of his oaklike weight, and as they stumbled back he swung his weapon over his head, and brought it crashing down on Jerry's breast, just as the latter had—too late—seen the coming blow, and raised his own to avert it.

Jerry fell on the instant. Philip saw the blow struck; saw Jerry fall helplessly into the arms of the man behind him, the paleness of death o'ergreeding his face ere it disappeared, and with a cry he struggled to reach Lorton, who had turned to meet him, with a smile of diabolical triumph on his lips.

Many suffer rather than take nauseous medicines. All who suffer from coughs, colds, irritation of the bronchial tubes or tendency to consumption will find in Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry a remedy as agreeable to the palate as effective in removing disease. The balsam is a pleasant remedy; it is a safe remedy; it is a powerful remedy; it is a speedy remedy; it is a remedy that cures.

FARM FOR SALE.—For sale, Springfield Cottage farm, one mile and a quarter from Guelph, on the York Road, comprising 100 acres, about 70 cleared, watered with three spring creeks, one running clear through the farm.
