The most powerful healing instrument ever discovered. It only fails to cure when the patient is hopeless, and it differs from all other instruments in that it will cure the most stubborn cases of the most terrible diseases.

CHAPTER I.
When Master Harry found time to think about things he began to see that the little Hump had been less generous than he had at first appeared. That the chimpanzee turned out to be utterly unreliable, and that the cigars were worth something like a quarter of their stated value, may have helped the process of enlightenment. Even when he had seen that to pay eight hundred and fifty pounds for a loan of five hundred pounds was to buy a temporary relief rather than a cure, he found that the hole he had dug a larger, and being in the main a reasonable young fellow, he took the matter seriously to heart and cast about in his own mind and in the world at large for means whereby he might at once his ways and his financial position.
