clear-headedness and precision, when my attention was arrested by the child and his pony scouring across the park in our vicinity—I need not say at poor Mouse's utmost speed. Lady Olivia stopped in her walk and drew herself up, as was her wont. "I wish you to know my son," she said, in her cold, measured voice; and the clear imperious tones, calling "Gilbert! Gilbert!" cut through the summer air to where he was galloping, intent only on Mouse and his performances.

The child seemed pleased to be taken notice of, and turned quickly in our direction. As he approached without checking speed, a fallen tree of no great girth lay in his course, and, with a pardonable display of horsemanship, he put his pony straight at the obstacle. I can see him now, sitting resolutely back on his little saddle, his golden curls floating behind him, and his smooth brow bent and rosy lips set fast for the effort. Mouse rose gallantly, but, predestined to fallure, or perhaps a little blown with the pace, caught his forelegs in the leap, and, pitching his little rider forward over his head, followed him in a very complicated kind of fall.

I was standing close to his mother, and I thought I heard her breath come quick; but as the child rose to his feet, I glanced at her face ere I went to catch the pony, and saw that it retained its usual marble composure. "What is the woman made of?" I thought, as I ran my arm through Mouse's rein, who no sooner found himself on his legs again without a rider, than he took advantage of the respite to crop a mouthful of the short were did to the short when I came back to them the child had be head to the methods.

When I came back to them the child had his hand in his mother's. He was pale and evidently shaken, but not the least bit frightened, though there was a cevere bruise reddening and smarting on his cheek-bone. With some vague remembrance of his nursery days he looked up in Lady Olivia's face, and I heard sweet grass. does hurt, mamma, dear; kiss it

But when the luncheon bell rang and ladyship had gone into the house, her ladyship had gone into the house, I met Gilbert on his way from the stables. He came up to me very shyly, and put his little hand timidly in mine.

"I like you," he said, "because you were sorry for poor Mouse when I beat him." Then, looking down and getting very red, he added: "I like people who are sorry; I would like you very much by you would let me."

Need I say that henceforth we were fast friends? I will not recapitulate the progress of our intimacy. How family circumstances brought me more and more into contact with Lady Olivia and her son. How I used to correspond with her son. How I used to correspond with e lad at Eton, and visit him regularly the dear old college from the "after-yelve" on which with three others of the fourth form he was deservedly fourth form he was deservedly vished," having attempted in vain to off with a seventh "first-fault," till memorable evening of the 4th of June on which I went up "sitter" in the ten-oar. How we parted with mutual regret when he went abroad for six months, and met again delighted, to read, as I have already said, for his matriculation at Oxford; a place from which I regret to say my pupil was more than once rusticated, in conse-quence of his attachments to divers sports and pursuits which cannot be brought to harmonize with academical regulations. But still, Orme was avowedly "the most popular man in his college. I knew one or two of the dons behind the scenes; their faces always brightened when his name was mentioned; and they were quite of my opin-ion, that with the least bit more application he would have taken "honors," and, being by that time pretty well his own master, he abandoned the university Nevertheless, I do not believe that the Nevertheless, I do not believe that the ripest scholar of them all could have written letters teeming with such classical learning, fun and imagination as that in which he apprised me of the unexpected failure; nor would I have exchanged for the proudest diploma of science the kindly expressions of regard and sympathy in which he couched his sanouncement of a defeat far more for for my sake than his own. After this I saw him, of course, at rarer intervals; the lives of a young man in the world and an old man out of the world are so and an old man out of the world are so different that they need seldom expect to meet. For full two years I had not set eyes on him, when I met him in Piccadilly on that spring day to which I have already alluded, after his walk with his cousin, Lady Gertrude, in the square. We were on opposite sides of the street, but my boy rushed across, regardless of mud and omnibuses, with all his old freshness and cordiality, to link me by the arm and turn me as of yore in his own direction instead of

'You have nothing in the world to do,' said the butterfly to the earthworm, "and I am always so busy I have not a mo-ment to spare. Come with me as far as ment to spare. Come with me as far as the top of St. James street, and tell me all about yourself as we go along."

I had been busier perhaps than he thought for, but my day's work was nearly over ere his had begun, and it was refreshing to look upon his kindly, handsome face, and listen to the tones of his cheerful hearty voice once more. handsome face, and listen to the tones of his cheerful, hearty voice once more, though it seemed to me that they were a little faded and saddened to what they had been long ago. I sometimes think the world wears the gloss off the players faster than the workers. It may be perhaps that the former are the more in earnest of the two. I know that I would fain possess the same energies now to be expended on useful nurnoses. now to be expended on useful purposes, which I wasted in my youth on trifles and worse than trifles; but, alas! in life, testigia nulla retrorsum, and indeed that world of long ago was a bright and joyous world after all.

It had not palled entirely on Gilbert yet. As we paced slowly along the pave-ment every second man we met seemed to know Orme and be glad to see him. fo know Orme and be glad to see him.
Bright glances were shot at him from open carriages, and pretty fingers kissed in his favor from brougham windows.
Truth is truth, and, despite all the sneers of philosophers, it is no unpleasant lot, while is lasts, to be young, rich, well-looking and well received in London society. A man must either be very looking and well received in London society. A man must either be very happy or very miserable who can afford to treat the opinion of his fellows with contempt. Even my own old heart felt lighter after my walk with my pupil; and I wended by way toward the British Museum. where I resolved to spend the afternoon, with a firmer step the usual; the while Glibert, with his hat very much on one side, sprang lightly up the steps at White's, and inquired, according to custom, of the affable functionary who presides over the postal detionary who presides over the postal de-partment, whether there were "any let-partment whether there were "any let-ters for Mr Orme."

There was one, a note that had just rrived. Gilbert smiled as he perused the laconic contents:
"Dear Gilbert.—The tickets have come for the morning concert. We will call for you at White's in an hour. Yours, "That's rather a bore." remarked the recipient with a yawn: "however I promised Gertrude, and, after all, it's something to do."

If the first reports of the game are true, the contest was not only rough, but brutal, two men being badly injured in the fourth period. Cully Robertson's pets bravely maintained their reputation of being a band of thugs. If this sort of thing continues tional game, about which there has been so much boasting, will soon fall into bad repute with the sportloving public. The man who plays lacrosse must expect some hard raps, but there is nothing in the game to warrant rowdyism. If the men at the head of the C. L. A. desire to see the sport flourish they should see to it that every player guilty of disorderly or unmanly conduct on the field should be disciplined in such a way that he will not repeat the offense.

THE WHOLESALE LEAGUE. The D. S. Perrin team were badly beaten by McClarys at Springbank on Saturday. They did not hold together well and eighteen of Summers' pitched problems were solved by the McClarys. This and eight errors on the part of the Perrins team accounts for their failure to make good. Southam's won by default against the L. P. and L. The latter team objected to one of the umpire's decisions, and on his determination to hold to it, refused to play Consequently the game was given to Southam's. The L. P. and L. were

BENNETT'S 23, BOWMAN'S 0.

The game of baseball played between the Bennet nine and the Bowman Hardware Company's club, on the Bennet Furnishing Company's new ball grounds on Rectory street, resulted in favor of the Bennet club by a score of 23 to 0. This was due to the superb work of Early, of the Bennet nine, who struck out 17 men, with Taylor behind the bat. The Bennet club gave him faultless support. The Bowman nine fielded well, but could not solve Early's pitching. Score: Bennets. Beltz, l. f.

It was won last year by Kincardine bowling club, and in tournament in connection with the trophy competition, and offer prizes in the different events. VARIOUS SPORTS.

A. G. Pittaway, of Ottawa, has received a letter from Sydney, N. S. W., asking how much the Capitals would guarantee for expenses should an Australian team decide to tour Canada next season. The letter is signed by F. J. McDonnell, and suggests that the guarantee be substantial, as the team's trip would be very expensive. Secretary Wm. Foran of the Capitals is looking into the matter.
