Business and Professional Men On North End Street Use Unique Methods.

WOMAN IS NOT WANTED

Male Visitors Comnig Out of Her House Escorted With Blare and Fanfare.

A certain woman recently came London, and before anyone could as-certain her reputation purchased a nouse on a new street in the north end of the city, which is populated by usiness and professional men. It was not long before the character of the place became known, and the authorities were appealed to. But the latter were unable to do anything, as the woman owned the house and could not be put out of it unless good reason was shown why she should not live there. There were many visitors to the place, but those who lived on the street did not welcome the idea of a raid upon the place, because of the publicity which would be inevitable.

So the men residing on the street organized themselves into a vigilance society, and kept watch upon the place. Every time a man came out of the with tin cans and other noise-producing devices they followed him, making his presence known to the world, and making it certain that he would not again visit the neighborhood. This original idea is said to have had the
