Messrs. Wetmore and Colter are defeated, but they are not discouraged. Public opinion is a fickle thing, and what was their lot on Monday, may be that of their opponents in the near future. Mr. Blair and his friends are dominant to-day, but their tenure of office will not last forever. The maiorities that buried Messrs. Wetmore and Colter, Monday, when the tide of popular fayor turns, will strike down over their decisive victory. Mr. Blair knows how it is himself.

We have no hard words for anybody. The FARMER has no reason to regret the course it pursued during the campaign. It gave its support unsolicited, to Messrs. Wetmore and Colter. It did not believe that the government had made an honest effort to carry out the policy advocated by Mr. Blair while in opposition, and it didates who were put up as the exponents defeat before and can endure it now. with the best possible grace, the reverses
