arsenic in the belief that it would protect him against fevers. He had continued it on account of its stimulative powers, and committed the dector only after the ill effects of the habit had manifested themselves. Up to 1880 he was the good health, and did his work well, although he was the taking from one to two drachms of Fowler's solution of arsenic every day or second day on account of exhaustion and "bad feeling." For four years he wandered from place to place, doing service as a trainer and heres doctor, and during this time the use of arsenic had steadily increased, until he was taking three onnoes of Fowler's solution in a day. The ordinary dose of the drug is five drops three times a day. Often found it difficult to grower see large a quantity of solution, so he commissed to use the powder, of which he ate fifteen or twenty grains a day.

His appearance at that time was that of a man in good health. His face was full, and the skin clear and white. The eyes were brilliant, though somewhat unsteady, and when talking the fabrial muscles moved inordinately. His countenance showed no wirkles or marked lines. His was that of the sensibility of the skin was diminshed. He complained of rheumatic stiffness, which was very pronounced when he was deprived of his nizual dose of arsenic. As times he are an inordinate amount of food, and then he would abstain from eating for a week or more. For a year his sleep had been broken by bad dreams; he would wake up covered with perspiration, and his mind was filled with vague and depressing fears. When he awoke in the morthing he felt a sense of exhaustion and pressure all over the body which steadily grew worse until the arsenic was taken; the morthing he felt a sense of exhaustion and pressure all over the body which steadily grew worse until the arsenic was taken; the morthing he felt a sense of chiases of the kidneys, but even after taking the drug, but after taking the drug, hus after taking it he would asked her taken the would asked her taken the work of the clease

He was very methodical in his habits, taking the drug twice a day in secret. He bathed very often to take away a strong odor of the skin, which was evidently caused by the elimination of the arsenic.

It is said that a man who eats onions the said that a man who eats onions are the correct that is partly caused by the elimination of the arsenic. He was known to his companions as a very changeable, eccentric man, who, early in the morning and late in the afternoon, was "half orazy." These and other symptoms indicated a general failure of both body and mind, rapidly approaching dementia. At times he was alarmed and wished to give up the use of the drug; at others he was indifferent. He told the doctor that if he could get this drug always he never would abstain, but he found it difficult to always keep a supply.
