

Some say the house is lonely set
In Northern night, and snowdrifts keep
The silent door; the hearth is cold,
And all my fellows gone to sleep. . . .

Had I my will ! I hear the sea
Thunder a welcome on the shore;
I know where lies the hostelry
And who should open me the door.