

A woman is walking from left to right in the foreground. She is carrying a young child on her back, secured with a colorful patterned cloth. She is also carrying a large white bundle on her head. She is using a long, thin wooden stick as a walking aid. The background features a tall, white wall that has been severely damaged by gunfire, with numerous bullet holes and a large rectangular opening in the center. The wall is topped with a concrete ledge. In front of the wall is a concrete fence with a vertical post. The ground is a mix of dirt and sparse vegetation. The sky is clear and blue.

A landmine survivor carries her child in Kuito, central Angola.