SCHEER CALLS NAVAL HOLIDAY BRITISH TRICK

German Skagerrak Commander Says London Is Sparring for Time.

WEIMAR, Germany, Jan. 30. - Admire: Scheer, whom at least half the world regards as one of the greatest leaders in naval war history, today for the first time since the signing of peace granted a newspaper interview. For the benefit of American readers I sought and obtained the opinion of the Skagerrak-Jutland commander on these great questions of the day. "America today is in a position strengthen her navy. Great Britain is in a bad position for two reasons; she hasn't the money and she doesn't know what kind of ships to build. Sees Selfish Motive.

The naval holiday plan benefits England only, not America. In three years who can tell what economic changes shall have transpired? England then would begin building again and by that time the building question regarding supremacy of the capital ships or submarines and other minor weapons will have been cleared up. England now in possession of a super for paval force, then would concen-trate upon her choice and would become still stronger.

'Universal disarmament would work out, but a naval holiday merely would tide Great Britain over a bad spot in her naval plans, her politics and her economic hardships. As far as I can judge, the press reports which clamor for a naval holiday come almost exclusively from Great Britain. America England, with her enormous fleet, has Therein a great lesson in naval warfare.

"England is naturally dissatisfied with the role her high seas fleet played off Skargerrak and and throughout the war. England's capital ships decided to do nothing and remained in port. A party arises of politiclans and naval men who are claiming that ships of the line are dead and who desire nothing built but submarines, small crusters and aircraft.

"The old-timers waver. Their indecision prompts the cry for a naval sholiday, during which experiments will show the best course to be adopted. This Is the best proof that England fecosnizes that she lost the Skagerrak battle and that her navy has not gained any new laurels.

America Has Advantage.

"Japan is an island empire like England and does not face the most important of all naval warfare problems, the possibility of an economic and food blockade. America, therefore, more easily than her rivals can afford to carry out her naval program.

"Certainly if I were an American I would not listen to the naval holiday."
