Supplies of Horse-Feed. Considering how easily and cheaply horse-feed can be grown, it is scarcely surprising that it is so generally neglected. It is a fact that the horse is a creature of habit, and that he will not eat anything but what he is used to. It is therefore of great importance that the horse-keeper should be careful to supply his horse with the best quality of feed, and that he should be careful to vary his feed from time to time, so that his horse may be able to eat anything that he may be called upon to eat.
