of her choice. He found her surrounded by every luxury, but the year he had not seen her had wrought a great change. The vivacious girl had changed to a dreamy, sensitive and somewhat an. Being questioned as to the cause of the change, she confessed that her husband. Paul Dean by name. was unreasonably jealous of her, thinking she had been untrue to him, and at times she feared for her life. She begged her brother to stay with her for a week or two, but he, being a doctor, could not, but consented to stay over night and was allotted a room adjoining wife's room, she, thinking it was her brother, called out, 'Good night, Jack, I am very happy.' Her unfortunate speech maddened her husband. He adlivid and mouth foaming, with a growl seized her by the throat, repeating again and again, 'False, false as hell.' Leaning over her he had sunken his teeth in her face two or three times. She had time to utter a scream of fear and pain before his fingers closed around her throat in murderous strength. Her brother hastened into the room in time but not her mind. Why know this before it hapo save her life, but not her mind. At times she is as sane as I am, for two probably, then she lives that dreadful scene over again, and a peculiar thing is that she knows for two and sometimes more days before that it is going to happen. 'Nurse,' she will say, 'there is something going to happen. Paul will surely kill me this time. Why am I allowed to know this before it hap-pens; I suffer it manifold ?' Often when I went to see her it would bring on the delirium. She thought me her husband, and would scream with fear, then lay watching me until the nurse would come and ask what she wanted, and why she screamed. She would mind? answer in her sad sweet tones, 'I cannot, I dare not tell.' Then she would turn and go to sleep like a child, and deep for hours. When she wakened she was quite sensible, but she never asked ogo home. All she asked was to see Jack.
