The Pride of Llewellyn

lifelike was doll-baby. And even when

Ennis brought it to her and asked her if she would not take it, she blushed faintly, and shook her head, and said: "All that is past now, Ennis, I have come to myself, take the poor toy away. When her dinner was brought, she turned away her head and utterly refused it for food."

"Very well," said Mrs. Llewellyn, when she heard of it, "very well" after she has fasted a few hours she will return to her food."

But Mrs. Llewellyn misinterpreted the strength of will possessed by Gladys. At tea time she refused her tea and toast.

"Exactly," said Mrs. Llewellyn. "She may be able to dispense with her dinner and tea, but she will not be able to resist breakfast tomorrow morning."

The morning came, however, and Gladys sent away her coffee and roll untasted. Twenty-four hours' fast already affected her health and strength, and she looked pale and moved languidly.

The second day of abstinence passed. On the morning of the third Gladys looked quite haggard, but still she rejected the fragrant coffee, and delicate rolls, and luscious broiled partridge that were placed before her to tempt her famished appetite.

"Leave it in the room until dinner time," said Mrs. Llewellyn.

And her orders were obeyed, but without effect, for the breakfast stood upon the little table untouched until it was replaced by the dinner, which also remained untouched until it was replaced by the supper, and so passed the third day of this black fast with the captive, who chose to fast in the sight of food rather than risk being dragged to her ruin.

On the morning of the fifth day Gladys could not rise from her bed unassisted. And when once she had slipped on her morning wrapper and sank into her easy chair, it seemed as if she would never be able to leave it again.

Ennis went and reported the condition of her charge to Mrs. Llewellyn who came to see her and gazed piteously and even angrily upon her wasted face and hollow cheeks and sunken eyes.

"So, this is starvation," said Mrs. Llewellyn, with cold cruelty. "It is an interesting case. I never saw one of any sort before. And I never heard of a case of voluntary starvation, though I believe there have been instances of compulsory fasting."

Gladys neither replied nor looked up at her tormentor. She remained reclining back in her chair, with her thin hands hanging down, and her blue pale eyelids drooping.

Mrs. Llewellyn stooped and examined her more closely, saying:

"There are dark circles around the eyes, and shadowy hollows in the temples and cheeks, and the lips are blue and dry and drawn away from the teeth. Interesting process this of starvation, especially when it is entirely voluntary on the part of the subject!"

To these cruel taunts Gladys still vowed no reply.

Then Mrs. Llewellyn spoke more to the purpose:

"See here, Gladys! I have given you time to get over your folly—much more time as was safe—more, perhaps and now if you do not take food, I shall force it upon you. Will you take it?"

"No," said the victim, without raising her eyes or moving a muscle.

"Ennis, bring me that cup of coffee and stand ready to help me," said Mrs. Llewellyn, and went and Mrs. Llewellyn arose and went close to Gladys.

But Gladys raised one of her wan hands, and in a faint voice said:

"If you would, madam, and listen to me: You think that you can force food upon me as you could force physic upon a child. But you forget that when a child is gagged and physic forced into its mouth, it swallows only to avoid suffocation. Now gag me and do force food into my mouth, if you dare, and I will suffocate sooner than swallow. Try it. It will be for me only a quicker and easier death than that of starvation, and for you—only one more murder added to your list of crimes."

"You are the devil!" said the woman drawing back.

"I am a Llewellyn!" said Gladys, proudly, "and I know how to suffer and to die too, in a good cause."

"No," said the victim, without raising her eyes or moving a muscle.

"Ennis, bring me that cup of coffee and stand ready to help me," said Mrs. Llewellyn, and went and Mrs. Llewellyn arose and went close to Gladys.

But Gladys raised one of her wan hands, and in a faint voice said:

WAS UNABLE TO RAISE HER HAND

Mrs. Harding McKay Was So Run Down She Had to Remain in Bed—Tanlac Restores Her.

"I am completely convinced now that Tanlac deserves everything good said about it," said Mrs. Frenda Harding McKay, living at Burnaby, B.C., to a Tanlac representative a few days ago.

"Some time ago I began suffering from indigestion," continued Mrs. McKay, "and my troubles kept multiplying until it seemed like everything was wrong with me. I had no appetite at all and I could hardly eat a thing and what little I did manage to force down would just lie in my stomach like a lump of lead and I would bloat up so from gas that I could hardly breathe and my heart would palpitate something dreadful. I also suffered with constipation and had to be taking some kind of laxative all the time. My head would ache so that at times I was nearly crazy and I had such awful pains in the small of my back I could not bend over. Finally I became so weak and nervous I could not do my housework and had to take to my bed, and was not even able to raise my head up. Children playing around me or any other noise would nearly drive me wild."

"I had heard a lot of good things said about Tanlac, so I decided to get a bottle and try it. Well, to my surprise, it was all that others had said about it and more, for I had not taken more than half of my first bottle when I noticed a big change for the better in my condition. I only took four bottles and that was plenty, for my case as bad as it was. My appetite is good and I can eat anything I want without the least sign of indigestion. I am never troubled with gas or heart palpitation any more and the headaches and pains in my back have all stopped. I am not bothered with constipation and my nerves are in fine condition. I have regained my strength and can do my housework with the greatest ease, and my general health is fine, and Tanlac is due all the credit for my renewed health."
