After World War II the College, now the University of New Brunswick under the direction and UNB White Students' Society, the presidency of the late Milton Fowler Gregg, V.C., attempted to create a cosmopolitan atmosphere for learning and opened its doors to students from other Canadian provinces, the United States, and from many European countries. Not too much later a proposal was brought before the University to organize the students along the Anglican students. In its original lines of the fraternity system charter it stated that the President employed in the United States. It was to be in the Holy Orders of the was turned down by faculty and Church of England, and that the students alike for being too discriminatory. To quote from a
