The Power of Sound, Lon., 1880, r. 8vo.

"With all his depth of thought and keenness of observation, the author adds little or nothing to what every musician of ordinary attainments must know as the result of his own experience. The problem of the effect of sound on phenomena on the mind is not made tighter by the manner in which it is here approached."—Ath., No. 2843.

"The precise states that its chief object is 'to examine, in such a way as a person without special technical knowledge may follow, the general elements of musical structure and the nature, sources, and varieties of musical effect, and, by the light of that inquiry, to mark out clearly the position of music in relation to the faculties and feelings of the individual, to the other arts, and to society at large.' . . . It is a book which dispirits on every side will need attentively to ponder. Psychologically and aesthetically—and, we would add, physiologically also—it is a book which makes a distinct forward step."—Spectator, 111, 1638.

"It stands in truth without a rival in its class, not only for varied interest and philosophic breadth of view, but also for positive scientific insight into some, at least, of the aspects of music."—Dict. of Nat. Hist., xxiii, 357.

2. Tertium (quid) Chapters on Various Disputed Questions, Lon., 1887, 2 vols. p. 8vo.

"The essays collected in these volumes run over a considerable variety of topics,—moral, metaphysical, and aesthetic; but the most cursory examination will show that they are marked throughout by the same predominatingly critical and controversial character. Single-handed Mr. Edmund Gurney encounters one after another such champions as Mr. Frederic Harrison, the author of 'Natural Religion,' Mr. Mallory, Mr. Arthur Balfour, the late Prof. Clifford, Prof. Pollock, Mr. Swinburne, Mr. Alfred Austin, the opponents of 'psychical research,' both parties to the vivisection controversy, the devotees of Wagner, and finally, in defence of his own musical theory, Mr. James Sully and Prof. Stamp. In each instance he shows perfect knowledge of the subject under discussion, perfect mastery of dialectical fence, perfect good temper and good taste. . . . He has worked out certain views on questions of the day which bring him alternately into conflict with both parties to the dispute. It is this attitude that the title of his book is meant to indicate."—ALFRED W. BENN: Acad., xxxiii, 73.

"Not only have the gentlemen who have collected this great stock of valuable data gone through a great deal of labour, and gone through it with a most painstaking determination to expose all the weak points of the evidence with which they were dealing, but we cannot too heartily praise the sobriety of judgment with which they have drawn their conclusions."—Spectator, ix, 116.
