

ing about Christ. A mob soon gathered. They shouted and threatened. At last in their wild anger they even began to stone Paul. They stoned him until he fell senseless in the street. Then they left him for dead.

But Paul was not dead. In some wonderful way God healed his hurts, and the next day he went on with his journey.

Paul had suffered for Christ's sake, but he was glad, for some of the people in that town had learned to love Jesus.

Mr. Dana could tell you a story very much like Paul's. When the boat in which he was sailing came into New York the other day, he told how he had been thrown into prison by the wicked Turks. Sometimes he had had nothing at all to eat—often only a crust of black bread. Once he and his wife and little child almost froze to death locked up in a cattle car. And the Turks did it all because he was trying to help the poor Armenians who lived in that far-away country.
