SIMPLE SAFE SATISFACTORY

The Douglas Gopher Poison Distributor is my own invention and has been used by me on my farm in Saskatchewan for several years, giving absolute satisfaction. It greatly reduces the time and labor involved in distributing gopher poison. Puts the grain exactly where required, out of reach of stock. Easily handled by children. By pressing a spring at the top of the tube just the right amount of grain is discharged at each hole, with no bending and little stop. Works equally well on corn, oats or barley.

likely to be adopted by the upper chamber. He suggested as a remedy for deadlocks between the senate and the Commons that the government have the right to appeal to the people, and if the people approved the proposed legislation and the act were again passed by the House, in the same terms, it would not again have to go to the Senate.

Mr. Turriff thought an elective chamber would be just as partisan as an elective house of commons. He thought the chief objection to the Senate is that it becomes filled up too rapidly with members of the party in power. He suggested that when the parties are even the leader of the opposition should have the right to nominate every third senator. Mr. Turriff also suggested that the upper house could be made a more vigorous body by the superannuation of senators upwards of 75 years of age and the appointment of younger men.

Sir George Foster thought that an elective senate would inevitably result in the election of senators who could not help but have party bias. If you want to get a senate with the least partyism in it, he said, keep the appointive power. Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke strongly in favor of the American system, which provides for the election of the senate, not by the people, but by the legislatures. Under this system, extending over a period of 70 or 80 years, the American senate was probably one of the most potent and able legislative bodies in the world.

Grain for Brewers

That steps should be taken by the government to cut off grain supplies to the brewers and distillers of the Dominion was another proposal which led to a debate which showed parliament in one of its best moods. The discussion was almost entirely along non-partisan lines and demonstrated an apparently genuine desire on the part of the house to do anything possible to conserve the food supplies of the Dominion for the benefit of Great Britain and her allies. E. B. Devlin brought the matter up. He quoted figures to show that during 1916, grain to an amount exceeding three million bushels had been used by the distillers and the breweries of Canada. He could see no valid reason from the standpoint of the farmer why this grain should not be used for other purposes.

Mr. Devlin's suggestion received a great deal of support from members on both sides of the house. Hugh Guthrie advocated the cancellation of the licenses of breweries and distilleries in the provinces which have adopted prohibition. Dr. Michael Clark doubted if the cutting off of the supplies to the breweries would shorten the war by ten minutes and advised the government not to take hasty action in view of the large amount of barley which would probably be sown in the West this year on account of the late season.

A new turn was given to the debate by W. B. Northrup, who assured the house that nine of the largest distilleries of the Dominion were not turning out one drop of spirits for the making of beverages. They were, he said, devoting their entire energies to the production of acetone which is used in the manufacture of high explosives used by the armies at the front. It was simply a question, he said, of voting for civilization or barbarism. The Kaiser would cheerfully vote in favor of the motion. Mr. Northrup admitted that the breweries are using considerable quantities of grain. Mr. Devlin then announced that he was quite willing to withdraw his motion. He had previously stated that he was willing to modify it so that it would apply only to grain used in the manufacture of beverages.

After E. M. Macdonald had criticized the government for considering expenditures on the Quebec and Saguenay railway, the Hudson Bay railway and under the proposed Highways Bill, as more important than the education of the returned soldiers and the youth of the country Sir George Foster rose and dealt with the situation in a conciliatory manner. Everyone on both sides of the house, he said, was in favor of technical education. The resolution would confine the government to action along the lines of the recommendations made by the commission of inquiry. While the report was a good one that might not be altogether desirable. "It is a question now," he said, "as to how it shall be done, as to when it is to be undertaken, and as to how much assistance shall be given." Sir George thereupon moved an amendment in general terms stating that "reasonable assistance should be given at the earliest practical opportunity."

FRENCH NOTABLES VISIT CANADA

Marshall Joffre and Ex-Premier Viviani, of France, paid a flying visit to Canada on May 12. M. Viviani visited the House of Commons where he paid a glowing tribute to the heroism of Canadian troops on the fields of France and Belgium. Marshall Joffre visited Montreal where he was accorded the most spontaneous and enthusiastic reception by the city ever paid to a visitor.

THE DIXON RECALL

A copy of the petition for the recall of F. J. Dixon, M.L.A., for Centre Winnipeg circulated by the Army and Navy Veterans Association and said to contain 3,896 names of voters of his constituency, was forwarded May 12 to Mr. Dixon. This is several hundred in excess of the number required to secure the recall, i.e., one quarter of the names on the voters' list in the constituency. Mr. Dixon has not yet announced the course he decides to take in the matter.
