retrogressive, conservative, nor obstructive, These terminations suit na not. We are for progress. It is a good word, and implies a necessity, We must progress backwards or onwards. Now we are going back. Peel's impulse sent us us a had track, He is a phusible leader, and accused by his party of deserting them. He may only have played a deep game for their good. Quintus Curtius-like, he rode his house, pride and place, into the gulf, and hade it close to save his friends. He found true free trade inevitable, and hit out a mixture, under the name, that would not work, in the hope that the alcekned patient would fall back into the practice of the old pills, and the prescriptions of the old dector. This is one wilsting of his movements, and it may be not less trub than others.

The union between this country and its colonical should be complete—a federativa union, is which they should be fairly and fully represented. The edvantages and handre open to the Queen's subjects in the Lothings or Lancashire should be equally open to them in Jamaics on in Cranda.—Objections of a chimerical character may be made to this arrangement, on account of distance and other difficulties, but Halirax, in Nove See is, in out now farther from London than Edinburgh was at the period of the union, while the difficulties and dangers of intercourse in the first case are jewer than they were in the last. A difference in triangular constitution is already recognized in Section, and in Ir-land especially, so that this provision need at mar the acheme. A small tax on now waste public lands, as they may be allocated, would meet the colonists; for their great interest is bound up

This position brings us to another and it This position brings us to another and important argument for maintaining the empire in its present extent and strength. The people of this country are responsible for a heavy national debt. A large part of the sum has been incurred for the benefit, defence, and maintenance of the colonies. If they are sacrificed, we lose all that money, although we must continue to pay the interest, and finally, perhaps, the principal. The unallocated lands of the colonies may fairly be their import duties on our goods after they are fairly in business for themselves; but who authorized any man to make that statement? The lying spirit that tempted statesmen to believe Mr. Bancroft, and trust in his promises of reciprocity from the United States. The democracies in all ages have done, will yield to the temptation of apparently providing for their own interests, and will protect labour. The only difference between them and our old aristocracy is, that they will not protect game or large estates. In other re-
