A December Sale.
Many people when they hear the words "special sale" shrug their shoulders with incredulity.
Perhaps they are not to blame. The "great clearing sale regardless of prices" and the "selling under cost" business has been over-done.
Our Position is This:
The season has been unusually warm—too warm to create much of a demand for heavy goods, and we have a very large stock of this class of goods on hand. It will pay us better to make some sacrifice of profit than to carry them over; therefore, we are prepared to make generous reductions in all departments of winter goods.
We will commence this sale Saturday morning.
A Bit of Counsel.
Don't buy Flannels, Underwear, Dress Goods, Mantle Cloths, Ready-made Mantles, Etc., until you see our stock and get our reduced prices. It will mean money in your pocket.

DEER HUNTING OUT NORTH.

Ye Scribe of the Reporter Recounts His Many and Varied Experiences While Hunting for Game in the Wilderness.

Although Josiah is not an American by birth, his manner of speech partakes largely of that nasal twang peculiar to a genuine "down Easter." On the night referred to in our last he was in good spirits, and dropping down on a log of wood in a warm corner of the tent, proceeded to tell the following story of what occurred on one of his hunting trips:

It was about the first of November, a few years ago, that I started out on a hunting expedition to the north woods. I engaged a lad of some 20 years, named Julius Cæsar S ——, to go along as assistant. Our outfit consisted of a heavy one-horse wagon loaded with provisions, traps, bedding, guns, ammunition and a light skiff. The weight of the load and the age of the horse made our progress very slow and when on the road some three days the old horse gave out and we concluded to stop over in order to recuperate him. Just at dark we reached the house of a farmer, who, in answer to our request for shelter, gladly consented, giving at the same time the pleasing information that there was a lake only a short distance away which abounded with fur-bearing animals, while the surrounding hills were said to be literally alive with deer. As neither party had any dogs it was proposed by the host that he would slip across the country to a neighbor's and steal one for a day or two, and that Julius Cæsar and I should take the boat on our shoulders down to the shore of the lake and set traps until we heard the sound of the hound's voice, when we were to take stations to intercept the deer as he took to the water. The day was bitter cold, with ice forming on the bays, so that the task of waiting was by no means pleasant. Fortunately we had not long to wait. Julius was put on a point to go to a runway and I pulled my boat into a sheltered nook, kindled a fire and sat down to warm my hands and thaw the ice out of my whiskers. Looking out on the lake, I saw a fine large buck followed closely in the rear by my host, Joab, in a small birch bark canoe. Jumping into my skiff I started out to cut off the retreat of the animal and when within a dozen yards of him took up my gun to shoot. "Dont! dont!" shouted Joab, "I must be the the one that kills that deer." The gun was lowered and a wait made for Joab to come up and dispatch the animal. As he came up he informed me that he always killed his game with a club, and wanted me to row on ahead and drive the deer back to him while he was getting his club ready. I soon had the animal within striking distance and Joab made a tremendous stroke at its head, with no other result than to break off the tip of one prong. The club flew out of his hands and went skipping along the water for two or three rods. The deer made a lunge when struck and passed close to my boat, but as Joab still insisted on doing the killing I gave him one of my oars and he started after the deer again. He paddled alongside and struck him a vigorous blow across the shoulders with no other result than to give my oar a bad break. The deer in its efforts to get away from Joab rushed right alongside of my boat, and I reached out and caught him by the tail. By this time I was out of patience with Joab and concluded to put an end to the struggle by quietly cutting the deer's throat with my jacknife. Keeping a firm hold on the deer's tail with one hand, I reached for my knife with the other and catching the blade in my teeth, I began to work my way alongside so as to get hold of his horns. This I succeeded in doing and finally got a good hold of its antlers and was just going to plunge the knife into its throat when Joab (who had rowed up behind in the meantime) shouted for me to give him the knife and he would do the butchering. This I consented to do, provided he would not put his hands on my boat. The deer was now between the two boats and Joab reached across and took the knife from between my teeth and made a lunge at the deer's neck. The first thing I knew I was nearly tipped into the lake and my boat half-filled with water. On looking for Joab I found that he was in the water with his boat floating in one direction and the deer swimming in another. I saw that Joab could swim and catching up my gun I shot the deer and then went to Joab's rescue. He was thoroughly chilled and was begging me to come to his assistance. I saw at a glance that the skiff in its water-logged condition would not support two persons, and tried to pull off one of my boots to be used as a bailing dish. All this time Joab was hanging on the side of my boat and begging piteously to be allowed to get into it. My boot was frozen so hard that I couldn't get it off, so I proposed to Joab that he hang on to the boat and I would tow him ashore. This he finally consented to do, and I started to get to shore, but having only one oar the speed was necessarily slow. When within about five rods of the shore Joab's pluck and patience gave out and he made one extra effort effort to get into the boat, with the result that it sank and we were both left struggling in the icy water. Fortunately the water was only up to our shoulders and we managed to push the skiff along to loud. While Joab replenished the fire, I righted the boat and paddled out to where the broken oar was, which I hastily repaired with a thong, and then took the deer and canoe in tow and brought all safely to shore. But Joab had to mourn the loss of his double-barreld gun and I lost a valuable hunting knife. The deer was placed in the boat and a start made for the other shore where we expected to find Julius to help carry the carcase of the deer to the house. But he had decamped long since and was comfortably toasting his shins by the kitchen fire. Having no other resource we shouldered the venison and started for the house, but soon had to throw down our load and work our way as fast as possible, as our clothes had frozen stiff and greatly impeded our progress.

Municipal Matters.

Athens, Dec'r 18th, 1891.

Editor Reporter:

DEAR SIR,—As nomination day approaches I feel it to be my duty to call the attention of the ratepayers of Athens to certain matters of public interest, and I trust that you will accord me space to do so.

The man who accepts a position at the trustee or council board must be prepared to sacrifice both time and money in the public interest as a condition of the retention of the honorable position he is to occupy. He is in honor and by solemn declaration bound to properly and economically conduct all public business, without hope or expectation of special pecuniary advantage to himself. Our lawmakers in their wisdom have ordained that—

"Any trustee who has any pecuniary interest, profit or promise or expected benefit in or from any contract, agreement or engagement, either in his own name or in the name of another with the corporation of which he is a member, or who receives or expects to receive any compensation for any work, engagement, employment, or duty, on behalf of such corporation shall ipso facto vacate his seat, and every such contract, agreement, engagement or promise shall be null and void, and the remaining trustees, or a majority of them, shall declare the seat vacant, and forthwith order an new election."—48 V. c. 49, s. 249.

A councillor is similarly bound This section is very clear, and the duties of auditors in respect to money wrongfully paid is equally clear. Subsection 2 of section 263 R. S. O. says that—

"They shall make a report on all accounts audited by them, and a special report upon any expenditure made contrary to law."

Now, it will be readily seen that if the auditors perform their whole duty, and the council takes proper action upon their report, the municipal boodler has a thorny path to tread and very little prospect of escaping with his ill-gotten gains. I make no charges; I do not say that public money has been illegally expended in this municipality. But I do say that if the auditors' report shows such to be the case, the sooner the guilty parties are brought to justice and made to disgorge the better for the interests of the village. No suppression of facts, no condoning of such an offence, should be tolerated. In company with many more, Mr. Editor, I look forward with interest to the publication of the auditors' statement and the developments of the next few days.

Thanking you for your valuable space.

Yours &c.,
VOTER.
