There is no need for going into that story now. It is well enough known, and so is the other fact, that when he had established the truth about Saskatchewan and the western plains, in the face of clamor to the contrary, he set abest at once to utilize it by covering the lasd with farmers. It was an undertaking too immense for any but the larges and broadest kind of method -the courty was so big. .. He had lived among the farmers of the middle west ern states, and he knew the desire that was growing up among them for more land. It really was a daring conception that lay at the back of his invasion of those states in search of settlers, for it squarely confronted a widespread sentiment against changing flags, and a total misunderstanding of Canada, both as to climate and fertility. But he went at it with understanding, and in no small way. He created the first, and one of the greatest, of the land-selling organizations that have canvassed the United States, and began to draw people across the boundary by hundreds and then by thousands. It was the nearest and best area of supply, and all his immigrants took with them both meney and skill. At one time he had no less than three thousand agents at work
