The Fishery Question.

The prospect of trouble is increasing between the Dominion and the United States arising out of fishing disputes. The Dominion Government determined at the commencement of the season to enforce its rights, and to drive off all interlopers. "Peter Mitchell's navy" has captured a large number of American fishermen, caught within the three mile limit, or otherwise infringing the law. All this has, of course, aroused the fishing interest in the States to a high state of belligerency.

The renowned Butler recently delivered a speech, snuffing of fire and brimstone, to his constituents, in which he said to them, "fish where you please and fight the vessel that attempts to prevent you." Butler's utterances towards England are always warlike; but in this case he is the exponent of a large party in the States that believes that a fisherman has a right to catch fish wherever they are found. They claim that the pretensions that would prohibit off the great deep into fishing preserves and punish those who catch fish, to which there cannot be more exclusive title to ownership than to the sea itself, are feudal in their nature and utterly at variance with modern notions.

This doctrine finds great favor with the fishing "ring," who believe in anything meeting their grasping designs. While this free trade doctrine of fishing anywhere is equitable as regards Dominion waters, Dominion fishermen are excluded from American waters.

The more moderate and reasonable of the American papers, in discussing this question, argue in favor of some genuine reciprocity between the two countries, that will settle the matter and avert dangerous complications. Others again are jubilant at this difficulty and the irritation it produces, and propose keeping it unsettled to be another item in their open account with England. Our countrymen hope and complacently contemplate, in imagination, the time when England's army and navy will be engaged in facing some foreign foe. Uncle Sam intends then demanding the payment of his little bill, which will of course include our fisheries.

The policy adopted by the Dominion, objectionable perhaps in some respects, is not barren of good results. The American people are being pretty effectively awakened to the value of our trade and fisheries, and to the advantage of dealing in a good neighborly way with us; and the prospect of reciprocity is much greater than when we weakly yielded up valuable rights and privileges and received nothing in return.

The War.

Delays are dangerous to the Prussians. Their onward tide of victory is stayed before the walls of Paris. They have completed their circuit of works about Paris, and commenced the work of bombardment and siege, but that is all. Their guns have not a range beyond the outskirts of the city. When the shot and shell commenced to rain into the city and shattered houses began to fall about the heads of their inhabitants and the flames make devastating pathways, it was supposed the soft and pleasure seeking Parisians would become terrified and panic stricken and before this would have yielded. But that picture has not been realized yet. The fortifications surrounding Paris are of a formidable character. They are extensive, but all that engineering skill could do to make them perfect has been done. The artillery, too, corresponds with the fortifications. Three hundred thousand men, under Trochu, are drilling within the fortifications and already evince the steadiness of veterans in the sort of they make. Paris is represented to be well provisioned. The Prussians, on the contrary, are living on a country already laid waste. They have to transport all provisions and material immense distances. Their guns are not all of high calibre and as yet they have not found it possible to shell the city. Their lines are frequently broken by French attacks, and the fire from Mont Valerien has created some destruction. Trochu's policy to worry and harass his enemy; to avoid any general engagement beyond Paris, but to fight the Prussians from the cover of his fortified defences is so far very successful. Its continuing success and the prospect of a peace honorable to France depends up on the resources of Paris and the determination and united efforts of its population.

Agricultural Exhibition.

The Sackville and Westmorland Agricultural Society's Exhibition is being held today. The weather is fine and the attendance of farmers good. The interest taken in these exhibitions is yearly on the increase. The number of competitors is about ninety. The number of entries about seven hundred. The number of competitors of farming utensils, roots, grains, butter, cheese, manufactures, &c., is sixty. The show of roots was never better. We noticed fine lots of potatoes and beets. Cabbages and corn look well. Home-spun, flannels, carpets and hearth rugs are in great variety. The increasing taste and skill displayed by housewives in this vicinity in making the latter article is a matter of comment.

The number of bulls exhibited was eleven; sheep forty-five; fifteen heifers and nine milch cows; ten pairs of steers; four pairs of working oxen; sixteen draught horses of various ages; twenty-five roadsters, varying from one to four years old, and eleven roadsters of any age.

The stock brought in Canada by the Provincial Board and afterwards sold at the Fredericton Exhibition and bought in for the Sackville and Westmorland Society, was auctioned off as follows: Clydesdale Horse, T. D. Vickery, $275; Short Horn Durham Bulls—Baron Clayton, J. D. Dixon, $18; "Clock Mahon," Wm. Cole, $26; Durham Heifers—Flora, Albion Fawcett, $80; "Fair Queen," Wesley Fawcett, $125; "Rose," Wm. George, $135; "Jelly," T. D. Vickery, $80; total, $788. The sale was considered good, the stock having brought about half what it cost.
