Constitutional Reform.

It is understood that when the British Parliament meets next week that Premier Asquith will make an announcement of the progress made by the Veto Conference. This conference, it will be remembered, has been sitting for some months. Its membership is made up of Mr. Asquith, Premier, and three other leaders of the Liberal Party; Mr. Balfour, the leader of the Opposition, and three leading colleagues of his party. The object of the conference is to discuss thoroughly the relations of the House of Commons and the House of Lords in all its aspects, and to try the possibility of finding a common basis of reform which shall be adequate to the business of Parliament and satisfactory to the electorate in general. Although nothing has been given out so far, as to the progress of the conference towards success or failure, there is a current running in Unionist quarters which has great significance.

Mr. J. L. Garvin, the statesman-journalist of the Unionist Party in the Observer has suggested the enlargement of the conference, in membership, scope and time, with a view to the important recognition of Home Rule on a federal and imperial basis, and a recognition by the Liberals of the need of a strong Navy.

This suggestion has been followed up by some letters in the Times under the nom-de-plume "Pacificus" by a writer whom the Times declares editorially had much to do by his letters earlier in the year, with shaping the course of events towards the present round table conference on the Veto question.

"Pacificus" claims that "The opportunity of settling the question of Ireland as well as the question of the House of Lords in the year of national rejoicing would appeal to the popular imagination as a few other things would. And it would appeal not only to the hearts of people at home, but as much, and perhaps more, to the hearts of our people in the Dominions. For these have never understood our quarrel with Ireland nor Ireland's quarrel with us—perhaps we have not entirely understood it ourselves, either on this side of the St. George's Channel or on the other."

Commenting editorially the Times

declares the suggestion "worthy of the careful attention of the Unionist Party and the nation."

These declarations are no mere sporadic utterances on the part of a few nobodies. They have been endorsed by all the great Unionist organs except two—the Spectator and the Daily Telegraph, and they are thus evidences of a temper on the part of Unionists to abandon even the very basis which brought their party into being and has kept it alive for nearly a century.

A miracle was wrought by conciliation and compromise in Colonial Government as a result of the Durham Commission, and good temper and a spirit of compromise gave rise to the Union of South Africa. Like causes produce like effects. What has succeeded in Canada, in the older Colonies, and in South Africa should succeed at home. A real union of hearts would, we believe, follow a devolution scheme in the British Isles, which should give to England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, Legislatures to deal with such matters as concerned themselves alone. This would relieve the Houses of Parliament of immense local burdens, and enable it to think and act imperially, and perform those functions better in which England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales and the Dominions beyond the Seas have an interest in common.

Received A Shock.

Miss Pollet whose father is skipper of the sloop Mary Joseph, reported to be missing came in by last night's train. While coming along on the cars a man who sat near her took out a paper and after reading the report of the vessel's non-appearance, spoke of it to others. The young woman overheard the conversation and this being the first intimation she had of the missing came in by last night's train. She fainted as the result of sudden shock, and it was some time before she revived. After arriving here she was very ill for some time in the hotel where she put up.

ACCIDENT ON PORTIA.—People who came down on the Portia and arrived here by last night's train from Placentia, say that one of the crew of the ship had his leg broken a couple of days ago by being hit with a large spar which was being put on board. The doctor at Port aux Basques set the broken bone and the man is coming along here on the ship.

Sudden Chill Stopped the Heart

Various stories of the tragedy have been told, and it is difficult, owing to the excited condition of the boy's companions at the time of the accident, to arrive at the true facts. The first account stated that the party landed for the purpose of balling out the canoe, and young Bagg, was in the act of pushing off when he fell into the stream and was swept away by the current.

The sudden chill caused by immersion in the cold waters of the stream stopped the action of the heart, and death resulted. The young man had six carbons on board the canoe which, with the addition of the occupants and their luggage, overloaded the frail craft causing it to careen and thus throwing Bagg overboard. The father of the deceased boy states that he exacted a promise from the young men not to put more than three carbons on board the canoe, and blames the disregarding of his wishes for the sad accident.

The body floated down the river, some 150 yards from the spot where the fatality occurred and was discovered by John Pennell and the river warden. The former went up the stream in his motor launch to search for the body of the young man.

The physician's examination proved that drowning was not the cause of death, no water having entered the lungs.—Western Star.

Swallowed a Snake in His Sleep.

Never again will Paul Natale, of Lincoln Avenue (Bristol, Pa.), recline at ease on the green sward and take his rest till his mouth hangs open. Natale tried that one day last June at the Corona Leather Works and awoke to feel something brush his mouth and to gulp. Now he knows why. He was seized with what he thought was an attack of acute indigestion, and from that day forth he lost weight and ran into a general decline.

His health having been broken up, he went to the Fabiani Hospital, Philadelphia, but the physicians were not able to relieve him. Then he went to a Trenton hospital, but still he lost weight and still suffered biting pains in his abdomen.

Natale was brought back to his home here and continued under the care of the local doctor. The latter sought traces of known diseases in the man, but could find nothing satisfactory. Finally he starved him for several days, and two days ago gave him a strong emetic. Up came a rather snake eight inches long, much to the consternation of Natale. The snake is now preserved in alcohol, and the patient has gained weight.

John Sheppard Crushed to Death at York Harbor.

John Sheppard, of Lark Harbor, was instantly killed by falling debris at York Harbor mine on Nov. 1. The unfortunate workman had been only employed at the mine a few days when the accident occurred. He leaves a wife and a large family to mourn the loss of a breadwinner. Deceased belongs to Lark Harbor, where his family resides. Immediately on learning of the fatality Mr. H. L. Bradshaw, manager of the mine, called the head office and also sent messages to deceased's family, and to Judge March who, in company with Inspector Bartlett, proceeded to York Harbor to hold an inquiry. Several witnesses were examined, including the manager, and their evidence showed that all necessary precautions were taken in the working and tramping of the ore on the night in question. Sheppard had been working in the ore car and when the earth began to work loose, the former man shouted a warning to him to leave the place at once. When the debris fell he called to him several times but received no response. He then came to the conclusion that he had been overtaken by the fall of earth. After the debris had been cleared away Sheppard was found pinned in the car, his hand crushed by a three ton boulder. About 30 tons of rock fell upon the spot, the timbers being torn away by the force of the fall. An inquiry into the disaster will be made by the Government Engineer. So far indications show that the accident is not an unusual one in the best regulated mines, and had Sheppard been a little quicker his life would have been spared.—Western Star.

Manuel has taken up his residence at Norton, near Evesham, the seat of his Orleans relations, a residence which by its seclusion and surroundings is ideally suited to console the early days of the exile. The days when an Emperor and Empress of France, a Queen of Spain, and a King of Hanover were in exile at the same time are now over. The rulers in exile of to-day are Oriental despots, the Shah of Persia, a pensioner of Russia, and Abdul Hamid not really in exile, but hidden behind the walls of the Villa Altarina, in Salonica. These, with the widow of the ex-King Milan and the aged ex-Empress Eugenie, complete the list. And yet the lives of the majority of royal and princely exiles seem cast in pleasant places. Endowed as most of them are with great wealth, they enjoy the honors and pleasures of royalty without the responsibilities. "Even" when an opportunity occurs of returning to their former position they generally refuse. A notable instance is the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, who, going to England owing to royal displeasure, has now settled down to the life of a great English nobleman, not even despoiling the office of mayor, and though the gates of Russia are again open to him, sensibly prefers his adopted home.

In olden times Twickenham was a refuge for dispossessed Royalities, and the Prince de Joinville came after the Revolution of 1848 had driven them from France. Orleans House—Louis Philippe's Twickenham home—is now "to let." By the park gates there is a public house known as the Crown. Many years ago a former landlord of this hostelry saluted the ex-King of the French as he was walking through the streets of Twickenham. "What were you when I lived here?" asked Louis Philippe. "Please, your Royal Highness," replied the man, "I kept the Crown." "Did you?" said the ex-King. "Well, you were lucky; you did what I was unable to do!"

Herring Are Plentiful.

This morning the Marine and Fisheries Department had a wire from Carling saying that eight American vessels had arrived there to date and that prospects were good for a successful herring fishery. Bonne Bay reports plenty of herring but very little demand for them as they are not so large as the first school which struck in there.

Exiled Royalty.

Old England Offers a Pleasant Refuge For Deposed Kings and Queens.

King Manuel has now joined the pathetic circle of "kings in exile," and has availed himself of England's traditional hospitality.

Manuel has taken up his residence at Norton, near Evesham, the seat of his Orleans relations, a residence which by its seclusion and surroundings is ideally suited to console the early days of the exile.

The days when an Emperor and Empress of France, a Queen of Spain, and a King of Hanover were in exile at the same time are now over. ### Now Cured of Rheumatism

Cost him $100.00 for medicines which failed—Cured by DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Mr. James Clark, Maidstone, Sask., writes: "I suffered for four years with rheumatism in my shoulders and could not lift my arms above the head. I tried nearly all the advertised remedies but none of them gave me relief. It cost me at least $100.00 for medicines before I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"With the use of this medicine, I soon found relief. I followed up this treatment for six months and was then quite free from rheumatism. While using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills I also used Dr. Chase's Backache Plaster which so stiff that I could scarcely bend. They always found the weak spot and gave relief while the internal treatment was bringing about thorough cure."

The success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills has been phenomenal. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers or Edman, Bates & Co., Toronto. Dr. Chase's Recipes will be sent free on request.
