LONDON'S RECRUITING RUSH. London last week palpably awakened to the need for proving itself thoroughly alert in the matter of recruiting, and as the days have worn on the rush to the attestation stations has become increasingly greater. As business men went from their suburban homes to their city offices on December 9th they saw longer queues than before standing outside these places, waiting their turn to see the doctor; and though the bright frosty air gave place to a miserable rain, they patiently stayed for their turn. This was the case not only in the suourbs, but the West End, for it seems at length to have been borne in upon the young single men, as well as on the younger married and as yet childess, that the path of safety, to say nothing of patriotism, lay along the oad of attestation. Even those who have been accustomed to boast that ed"-though the number of such poasters has, for sensational press purposes, been greatly exaggerated -byjously felt that there would be no doubt as to the fetching process if they, and such as they, did not present themselves before December 11. No official statement to Parliament regarding the net result is to be looked for before December 15th, and meantime it will be well to receive

CHRISTMAS BAZAARS IN WAR

Whatever changes this Christmas may show in London there will be none in the children's Christmas. So from "well-informed quarters." The at any rate proclaims the toy bazaar, which is as popular, as abundantly stocked, and as wonderful as ever. The children's season is now in full swing, and crowds throng the great this all-important issue and only when the secret is properly revealdiate future in this particular be bazaars from early morning to the close of business hours. The toy-maker has not been idle since last Christmas, when the demand for toy soldiers exceeded the supply. But he has not been content with the manufacture of these traditional delights.
