

Gifts of Christmas Eve

PARTITIONS I HAVE ACTUALLY SEEN.

(By ELLIOT O'DONNELL.)

My first Christmas I was in London, after coming back from the Far East. I spent alone in a dingy room, knowing nobody, so had to be content with the evening or remaining in the dingy quarters.

On the morning and afternoon of December 24th reading, and after I felt that I wanted some exercise and walked to Richmond.

It was dark when I thought about returning, but as I was making up my mind to leave a strong desire to see the river in all its dreariness suddenly came to me.

I yielded to the desire, and made for the river.

On the Christmas festivities, I was alone, the terrace adjoining the river was deserted. However, I was gazing at the water when I became aware of a man standing close to me, also gazing at it.

I hadn't heard him approach. I turned somewhat curiously at him. He noticed my astonishment that I was wearing a very peculiar costume—one of those long overcoats with a cape that used to be worn in the days of our great grandfathers.

He also wore top boots and a high top hat.

Someone going to a fancy dress party, I said to myself. And as I was wondering what brought him to such a place he began to move away.

Then a very curious thing happened. I was looking after him—he vanished.

The night was dark. It is true, but so dark that he could be lost sight of within half a dozen paces. Nor could he have slipped behind any obstacle—a tree, for instance—because a spectacle was anywhere near.

I did not go to Richmond again for some time, but when I did, recollecting my former experience, I inquired of different residents if they had ever seen any stores of hauntings in connection with the Thames there.

I was eventually recommended to call on a Mr. D., who lived by the river.

I told him about the adventure, whereupon he said:

"I know that figure. I saw it there myself on Christmas Eve ten years ago and it vanished in the manner you described. Possibly it is the earth-spirit of someone who was revealed in the river one Christmas many years ago, and it returns just about the anniversary of its death."

The river-side between here and Richmond is haunted periodically, however, by other ghosts apart from the one you saw."

Another ghostly experience I had on Christmas Eve was in a titled lady's house in Kensington.

I was one of a large party dining there, and I noticed that there were three men in the room, one of whom appeared to restrict his attention to a certain relative of the hostess.

This particular manservant was a peculiar-looking individual, but I couldn't take my eyes off him. He was tall—well over six feet; thin; with very white, haggard cheeks, and hair of a most unusual orange colour.

But the most striking feature about him was his eyes. Big and of a very light hue, they were absolutely glassy, as if they were made of glass.

As they appeared to lack expression, and to be wholly lifeless, I did not think of him as being anything but a man moving about among the plates and dishes, never getting in anyone's way, and always devoting himself to the one person. But I noticed that she never took anything from him—did not appear to notice him in any way.

The whole thing appeared to me to be so odd that I could not help remarking on it to my hostess when we were talking together afterwards in the drawing-room.

"I don't know his name," I said. "But he is the very tall man with the horrible orange-coloured hair."

At the mention of orange-coloured hair she turned deathly pale, and for a few moments looked so unwell that I thought she was going to faint. She quickly recovered herself, however, and said:

"Please don't tell anyone here what you saw. This house is haunted periodically by a figure such as you describe. It is supposed to be the ghost of a butler who is said to have committed suicide in a room on the ground floor one Christmas Eve many years ago. Did—did he appear to be waiting for anyone in particular?"

"Yes," I answered, "on Miss H.—" "Good heavens!" my hostess exclaimed, in tones of the greatest agitation. "Not Bertha! Oh, but I wouldn't have anything happen to her for worlds."

But something did happen to her, for within a week I heard from my hostess that Miss H. had just died from the effects of a chill.
