Monday was an ideal day in more ways than in regard to the weather, too, for, barring a minor accidentthat in which two sulkies came together in a trotting and pacing race resulting in what looked like a bad mix-up for a moment--nothing occurred to mar the pleasures and consequent success of the day.

Whilst the great majority of people took to the stands in the afternoon, many also remained on the grounds and took in all the sights. The main building was well filled all afternoon and evening, and those who brought goods for the people to see certainly had their wishes gratified. It was the same with all the other buildings, many constantly visiting the agricultural, horticultural, dairy and machinery halls. The cuttle and horses were also remembered, the judging of the English shire and Clyde horses attracting large numbers of horsemen to the judging

The cane and ring men, the sideshow men and the people who run booths also got a fair share of notice, though it would be exaggerating things to say that they rolled in fortunes yes terday.
