The first permitted that occurs in this lordship is somewhat extended career, is not two fear of the popular ranch of the Legislature, and triver bearth from its experience what nothing also can then the popular ranch of the Legislature, and triver bearth from its experience what nothing also can tench a Minister; but from his social standard and the particular department of public admits in which his lordship has never been wanting of late years in good sense, and feating and the principles of the cast and the principles and the principles of the cast and the principles and t Aberdeen is not a statesman of popular sympathes. He has never been wanting of late very high in good sense, and feration, and candour; but, on the other hand, he has never been much distinguished by generosity, ferwar, or zeal. Lord Aberdeen is cold, philegmatic, austere, and logically severe life is honest and just, but is aristocratic and reserved;—right minded, and on emergences not deficient in courage, but stow and inflexible; occasionally, too, his firmness has assumed the air of obstancy, and has become assumed the air of obstancy, and has become even passionate. To the Commons House of people at Kean's funeral, there was a difficulty in getting out of the church. A compaling who had been intimate with him by but fittle known; its confidence is a plant by but fittle known; its confidence is a plant by slow growth; and there Lord Aberdeen can personally neither expect nor hope for any enthusiasan in the support he will need and solicit.

Comedian who had been intimate with him whispered, as he went out, while a tear glistened in his eye, "This, then is the end of Kean, poor fellow! But he drew a crowded house to the last."

Liberals must have their festrs and appre-Laberals must have their festes and apprehensions,—for of their party the Earl of Aberdeen has certainly not been in times past. The transition state in which, however, his lordship has of late been, is not on the other hand unsuggestive of hope and expectation. And a this state of suspense and doubt the best policy. Liberals can adopt is doubt the best policy Liberals can adopt is to stand by their guns," and be satisfied with nothing short of substantial progress, thankful however, for that, whencesoever it may come. - [Daily News.

care of Moore's early years, and unabated love through her advanced years, was truly cying respect by the son. When Mr. Moore (the tather) died, having held for years a government appointment of barrack-master, friends sought to secure for his widow a pension; but Moore claimed the privilege of her support, and declined the kind agency which would have debarred him of a son's greatest pleasure. His habit was to write twice a week, at least, to his beautiful. They were requited, too, with the fullest measure of grateful affection and undying respect by the son. When Mr. Moore pleasure.
