Correspondence

Great Britain has ever stood for liberty and justice, in spite of many mistakes (for there is nothing perfect) the British Government has uniformly been a righteous Government. Her laws are just and right. She is the friend of the oppressed, the acknowledged arbiter of peace and good will, magnanimous to her enemies, treating them wisely and kindly, and seeking to work out the highest interests of those whose fortunes have placed them under her sway.

Surely it is no mean thing to be a citizen of so great an Empire.

Let it be the serious duty of every man and woman, especially of all parents, teachers, and those interested in the rising generation, to instruct and set forth the duty and responsibility resting upon us as citizens of so great an Empire—that we may be prepared with strong hands and clear trained minds, to stand firm in the day of our country's need,—to assist in guiding the ship of state on her destined course to a yet higher, grander, greater future than she has yet accomplished.

To this end may we not reasonably hope that from the pulpits all over the land clergymen of all denominations will call attention to the higher aims of the movement,—duty, responsibility, sympathy, self-sacrifice, shall assist in a general awakening to the seriousness of our duties, first to Almighty God, who is ever all and above all "King of Kings," and secondly to the King who is at the head of it,—and may we not hope to save the King?"
