"A GENTLEMAN, NURSE, THAT LOVES TO HEAR HIMSELF TALK."

-Romeo and Juliet, Act III., Scene 4.

Apropos to a controversy that has been taking place in the columns of the London Times on the subject of nude art, Jerome K. Jerome says that "the human form is a disgrace to decency, and ought never to be seen in its natural state." This is well enough, but J. K. J. should remember that people did not make their own indecent forms. The milliner's art has been called into play to hide this indecency, and it would really puzze an Eastern magician to divine what kind of figures are concealed by the puffs and pads so much in vogue with the fair sex, and not with the fair sex only.

An American who lately visited Canada wrote his impressions of the various cities he wrote his impressions of the various closes he had passed through, and remarked of Hamilton that "it is a prettily situated place, the streets being lined with beautiful trees, amongst which the chestnuts preponderated." Yes, Hamilton is a great place for chestnuts as any reader of the "funny" column of the Spectator will allow.
