

is. If the Commonwealth is to continue being useful, we must be prepared to experiment, we must try new ways to tackle existing problems. We must set aside stale methods and outmoded approaches. You within the non-governmental field and who are less bound by what are sometimes considered sacrosanct considerations of government are perhaps in the best position to take a fresh look at problems and to propose possible solutions. We look forward to the results of your deliberations here at Dalhousie.
