

The first Secretary-General of the ILO, Albert Thomas, once said, with justified pride: "We have taught the world to speak something like the same language on labour questions". I would say that all of us who help to carry forward the work of the ILO, its sister agencies and the United Nations itself are teaching the world to speak the same language about civilized international relations, about goodwill between races and cultures and about peace.

---

S/C