

He lay down again and had a turn at being seasick. By and by he crept up on deck and got into conversation with a man. After some talk with him he found it was the very man who had been overboard. He began to talk with him about how it happened.

The man said he was going down the third time and had given up all hope, when some one put a light at the porthole and they just saw his hand and grabbed it. By putting that light at the porthole, he saved a man's life. My dear friends, you can just hold the light for some one else, can't you? You can do something if you will.

Now, my friends, what we want is to do something. Just think of the work that could be done here if each one of us would do some one thing! Some one has described this world as two great mountains; one a mountain of sorrow and the other a mountain of joy. If you can take a little off of that mountain of sorrow and put it on the mountain of joy, the mountain of joy keeps growing. Doesn't it? If you cannot do as much as some one else, just do what you can. God doesn't ask me to improve ten talents if I have only one. But if I go and bury my talent because some one else has more, then I am not going to hear the master say: "Well done." Now, I want to say that there is something that every one can do if they love Christ, and I am talking to Christians this afternoon. If we are true Christians we can speak to some one every day about spiritual things. Now, I have been asked to say a word and tell the people how they can keep from backsliding. A good way is to make it a point to read a portion
