Dr. Harris' Idyl "Pan" And the Sheffield Choir

Last night's Sheffield Choir concert did not attract nearly so good an attendance as on Monday night, and apart from the personal interest of Sir Edward Elgar conducting his own composition, the program was much more enjoyable for a general audience. There ought to be twice as many people present to-night for the closing concert.

Dr. Charles Harris' Symphonic Chorus Idyl, as he describes the composition, which furnished the chief attraction, is a picturesque and melodious cantata, and Josephine Preston Peabody's words give "Pan" the distinction of poetical expression and literary loveliness. The story is simple. Pan pursues the nymph Syrinx, and to escape him she plunges into a bank of reeds from which he fashions the pipes that give music to the world. The libretto is richly suggestive, and Dr. Harris gives it a setting which never allows the interest to flag, even though the one finds no forgettable strains. The opening chorus, with its joyous and brilliant phrase, puts one at once in sympathy with the work. The Sheffield chorus is admirably fitted for the bright, frank reading of the libretto. The choral passages presented no serious difficulty in the opening numbers. A charming chorus, "Ah, Maiden Stay," concludes with a high note, and is well sustained. The orchestra has a beautiful bit of scoring during the chorus of Naisida, "Syrinx, What Will Thou Dare?" The Naisida, a lovely passage in "A River Reed." The gay and rhythmic movement of the chorus "O Sweet," the capricious intention of the scherzo, and the really beautiful chorus, "We Heard a Sorrow sound on the Wind," which followed, was amply worthy. Dr. Harris' orchestral ingenuity is marked in such instances as the drum beat at the close of the line, "And down the air the little sorrow flows." A massive male chorus takes the next stanza and the full chorus concludes "O golden weather," a richly melodious passage in which "Be glad all things own are glad together," indicates of what Dr. Harris is capable. The finale is a daring and striking and highly successful stroke, "O golden song." Dr. Harris did not owe much to his soloists, though he sang conscientiously. The chorus did him justice, however, and showed that they had more spontaneity and had more fully escaped from tradition, late or early, than Sir Edward Elgar. Popular opinion may not be worth much, but ten would prefer to hear "Pan" once more for one who would choose the shrieking devils of the "Dream of Gerontius."

Dr. Henry Coward conducted the second part with the exception of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra number, Liszt's "Les Preludes," perfectly done, and the "The Boils of St. Michael's Tower," an encore bringing the lullaby "Sleep My Son"; Thompson's "Night Hymn at Sea," with Weekes' "The Nightingale," for an encore; Purcell's "In These Delightful Pleasant Groves"; Sullivan's "Long Day Closes" and "A Franklynne's Dogge," for men, to divert the traffic from these roads to the roads of the south.

Fielding Refused.

He described the agreement as class legislation. Why did he not put the manufacturers in the same position as the farmers? The government had had an opportunity of meeting the wishes of the farmers and placing farm implements on the free list. But President Taft stood at Atlanta that Mr. Fielding had refused.

H. H. Miller, in reply to the policy of the Conservative party to have free trade in agricultural implements?

Mr. Bradbury: When you put the leader of the opposition in the position of premier you will find out what he will do.

Mr. Lancaster: And he will be consistent.

Mr. Bradbury: Quoted Senator Sherman and other Americans to show that the Americans were making this agreement in order to bring Canada into the United States. The Canadian ministers had fallen into a cleverly conceived trap. It would not help the west, for the west was now prosperous. The trade agreement would be a disaster to our national market, but our natural resources and our shipping out more wheat than Canada.

The Farmers Point of View.

Andrew Broder, following Ralph Smith (Nanaimo), attacked the agreement from the point of view of the farmer. He asked how it was that the government was going to give the farmer higher prices for his produce and cheaper food to the consumer. He regarded the argument as foolish. He agreed with Mr. Smith that the condition should be considered, but he contended that the man in the furrow was the man who ought to be considered first, and he was not ashamed of his position.

As to the free trade arguments of Mr. Smith, he asked how it was that he wanted to throw this country into the arms of high protectionist United States. The member for Nanaimo had said that the Union Jack would be safe in the hands of the United States. "You don't find it there," Mr. Broder remarked. On the other hand, there were many American flags to be found in western Canada. He denied that President Taft had brought about reciprocity. It was a free trade agreement, and if the government had a mandate from these people, they had also a mandate to

Sudden Death of Well-Known West End Lady.

WEST TORONTO, April 5.—(Special.)—The death occurred suddenly at 11:00 to-day of Mrs. S. K. Watt of 224 Evelyn-avenue. The deceased lady went upstairs to her room in apparent good health shortly after midnight, and was found shortly after by some of the members of the family lying dead. The body was subsequently removed to a mortuary, where Dr. McNamara performed a post-mortem examination. At 9 o'clock to-night Dr. Gilmour opened a coroner's inquest, with Robert Paterson as foreman, and which was later adjourned until next Monday evening at 8.15, at the family residence on Evelyn-avenue. The funeral will take place from the family residence on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, to Prospect Cemetery.

The special preacher at the Lenten Wednesday evening in St. John's Church to-night was the Rev. R. A. Simms, rector of the Church of the Messiah.

The death occurred to-day at Caledonia East of Mrs. James Magee. The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Wagner of 88 Mulock-avenue, to Dixie Cemetery for interment.

Two lodges held their regular meetings to-night in St. James' lodge room—Wallace Forester, No. 474, Royal Black Knights of Ireland, met and were addressed by Lieut.-Col. Belcher of Southampton, past Provincial grand master of Ontario West. Some of Kent Lodge, Daughters of England, also held their regular meeting.

The fremen here received a call this afternoon about 4.15 to the house of David Nicholson, 21 Baskin-avenue. A small blaze had broken out in the bathroom, started by a little boy six years of age. There was little or no damage.

The Ratspaw Association of Ward seven held their regular meeting this evening with President Laughton in the chair and a fair attendance. Important resolutions were carried. Among them were: That the medical health officer be requested to enquire into the disposal of garbage in the ward; That the health commissioner be asked to furnish a supply of shades free to applicants; and that a committee be formed to formulate a scheme of donating prizes to working men for the best kept or improved lawns and gardens.
