Buenos Aires, April 23.—In accordance with an agreement entered into with the British minister, the Argentine Government has authorized the exportation of 180,000 tons of wheat and 20,000 tons of flour to England on condition that 200,000 tons of wheat from the Canadian harvest shall be returned to Argentina in July.

THREE TORONTO MEN AWARDED THE CROSS

Gallantry at Vimy Ridge is Rewarded With Military Decoration.

Three well-known Toronto officers, Captain P. C. Stanley, Lieut. W. E. Poupore and Lieut. "Bill" Wallace, have been awarded the military cross for gallantry displayed in the first Canadian attack on Vimy ridge, according to a despatch received yesterday from London, England.

Lieut. Wallace was formerly with The Toronto Star, and a lieutenant in the 109th Battalion. Besides distinguishing himself in the latest battle, he led his platoon on March 1 in a successful attack.

Capt. P. C. Stanley, formerly of the firm Smith and Stanley, took out his commission with the 34th Battalion, but was later transferred. In the fighting of last September he was wounded, after being only a month in France. He is of Irish parentage and has been in Toronto ten years.

Lieut. W. E. Poupore, is a graduate of Toronto University, receiving his B. A. degree in 1914. His home is in Vancouver, B. C., but he is well-known in the city. He was wounded in March of this year as well.

LAY WIDE SIDEWALK.

One of the widest sidewalks in the northwest section will shortly be laid on Oakwood avenue, extending northward for a considerable distance. The width will be ten feet.

CANADIAN FRONT GAINS FOUR THOUSAND YARDS

Skilful Patrol Fighting Enables Heroes of Vimy Ridge to Secure Full Fruits of Victory—4000 Prisoners and Valuable Spoils Gathered in.

London, April 23.—The following communique has been issued by the Canadian war records office:

Since April 9 the historic day on which the Canadian corps captured Vimy ridge, the great German stronghold, the full advantages of the first day's victory have been realized. Progress has been made and our line has been advanced along the whole front to an average depth of 4000 yards, mainly as a result of skilful patrol fighting.

Much hard work has been entailed in the consolidation of the recaptured positions. The very trying weather has imposed a severe strain on our troops. The roads are our chief problem, and if any further proof of the unparalleled triumph of our artillery is needed it can be found by an inspection of the roads which were once behind the enemy's lines.

Assail Strong Position.

On April 10 the Canadians again attacked on the northern slopes of the ridge. The position was one of great strength, embracing the southwestern outskirts of Givenchy, La Folie Wood and a most intricate system of craters and trenches surrounding Hill 145. The conditions were all in favor of the defenders as continuous shelling and heavy rain had turned the ground into a quagmire.

Desperate fighting had taken place thruout the whole of the preceding day and night and tho we had made good progress the enemy still retained a footing in this stronghold.

The attack was entirely successful and completed the capture of our final objectives along the whole front of 7000 yards. During the afternoon large bodies of Germans were seen in the open and it became evident that the enemy was concentrating for a counter-attack against the left flank of our new position. The attempt, however, was completely frustrated by our artillery, who, taking full advantage of the excellent facilities for observation across the Douai plain from our new position, scattered the enemy and inflicted heavy casualties.

On April 9 there were no serious infantry engagements. Our patrols were active thruout the day, pushing forward along the whole front and gaining ground at practically no cost. Those batteries which the enemy had been able to withdraw were very active, but many of their positions were now exposed to direct observation and suffered severely at the hands of our own gunners.

It had now been decided to enlarge the scope of operations to include the Pimple, a commanding position of great strength on the extreme north of the Vimy Ridge, similar in many respects to Hill 145. The attack was carried out at 5 a.m. on April 12 in the midst of a snowstorm and over most difficult ground in a manner beyond all praise. In this attack the enemy suffered very heavily, leaving many dead on the battlefield; and in addition we took over 200 prisoners, together with numerous machine guns and trench mortars. The blow was a severe one for the enemy, as it gained for us the whole ridge from Souchez to the Scarpe and shattered the enemy's last hopes of being able to regain the lost ground by a counter-attack from the northeast.

Full Fruits of Victory.

The full fruits of our victory took shape and form on the 13th, It was clear that the enemy's new line at the foot of the eastern slopes of the ridge would soon become untenable. Our observers had reported fires and explosions in towns behind the enemy's lines, and there were indications that a retreat was imminent. This was soon confirmed by our scouts, who acted with admirable skill and determination. Patrols were pushed forward all along the line. In many places the enemy had succeeded in leaving under cover of darkness. In others small rear guards were encountered and overcome.

Prisoners and Spoils.

By night fall our line had been extended to beyond the Vimy-Arras railway, and the Villages of Willerval, Farbus, Vimy, Petit Vimy, La Chaudiere and Givenchy were in our possession. Our captures had increased to over 4,000 prisoners, more than 40 guns and a large quantity of machine guns, trench mortars and material of all kinds. This was not a prepared withdrawal, but a disorderly retreat. The enemy had not time to remove his guns and to destroy everything of value in the villages. Several thousand rounds of ammunition were abandoned, and many of the captured guns are now in action against the enemy. Excellent work has been done and great credit is due to our crews. In one instance our gunners, using two captured guns, engaged a hostile four-gun battery and completely silenced it with the enemy's own gas shells.

The loss of the Vimy Ridge has dangerously weakened the enemy hold on Lens and the great industrial districts surrounding it, and a captured officer expressed the opinion that it constituted one of the most serious defeats sustained by the enemy in the war.

WAR SUMMARY

THE DAY'S EVENTS REVIEWED

IN the fighting east of Arras yesterday the British advanced on an eight-mile front for a considerable distance in the teeth of strong German resistance at some places. Field Marshal Haig launched the assault on both banks of the Scarpe River, on a two and a half-mile frontage north of the stream and a five and a half-mile frontage south of the stream. The action, in fact, extended from the region of Croisilles Village in the south to a point west of Gavrelle Village in the north, and the British advanced their line in two sections, taking Gavrelle and the German defence down to the cemetery of Roeux Village, right on the Scarpe, and also taking ground on a wide front south and east of Monchy-le-Preux, including Guemappe Village. The reason no more than two villages were taken is that in this zone of advance there were no more villages to take. Villages are sparser than usual in this area.

While this action was proceeding on the south or right flank of the Canadians, the Canadian northern or left flank became engaged with the Germans posted before Avion Village, a southern suburb of Lens, and they penetrated into the place in house-to-house fighting. They began the attack with their left wing. Its right and centre easily reached their objectives, but the left flank of this left wing met with sharp resistance from the Avion electric station just across the street from the village proper. The infantry was held back until the heavy artillery deluged the station buildings and also a section of Avion with shells. When the infantry again assaulted, it found that the bombardment had considerably reduced the resisting powers of the Germans, and the Canadians rapidly drove them from house to house.

The Germans offered more than their usual resistance yesterday, because, expecting the assault, they had posted large reserves in positions for rushing forward into the breach. This led to heavy fighting and pretty severe punishment of the Germans by British artillery fire as they were moving up to the counter-attack. The enemy had also heavily manned his defences. In consequence the British carefully searched each position with shells before advancing. Thus they killed more Germans than usual, and so they did not take so many prisoners. Twelve hundred Germans surrendered north of the Scarpe.

In brief, the immense collection of big guns, field pieces, trench mortars, mine-throwers and bomb-throwers, not to mention chemical appliances, now used by the allies, have rendered the trench system of defence as obsolete as the old forts of Antwerp. The allied abundance of these weapons has compelled the enemy instead to adopt the method of occupying deep belts of ground besprinkled with barbed wire and dotted with little redoubts filled with machine guns and gunners. In consequence the charge has become at least more careful. The infantry has to search out these nests and have the artilleriets turn on the high-explosives at close range. Tanks also do good service in this sort of fighting.

The Germans, according to the custom of their country, refuse to admit that the British made any advance. Their official communication, issued at Berlin last night, said that on the battlefield of Arras the new English assault broke down without success under very heavy losses. Deception, of course, is a lawful instrument of war, and no victory can be won by constant dwelling on failures, but the enemy now has probably a more cogent reason than this not to confess reverses. The German war lords probably fear that if they undeceive the German people their end will be speedy and certain.

The Germans will die with military text books in hand, for they persist, tho fighting heavy odds, in going by the rules that the attack is the better form of defence; and they exemplified it yesterday by a series of futile assaults on the French troops in Belgium. The French had no difficulty in beating off the assailants. While they were firmly holding their Belgian front the French further indented the German lines between the Aisne and the Chemin des Dames by making fresh progress north of Sancy Village and the region of the Hurtebise farm. On the front between the Somme and the Oise the French batteries put in another heavy day's work in the shelling of the German organizations.

The reported sailing of the German Baltic fleet and several units of the high seas fleet for Petrograd, perhaps, presages a naval engagement in those waters. Certain British weeklies with friends at the war office, just to hand, contain suggestions that the next exceedingly great development in the war will be naval in its character. It is not impossible that the allies, foreseeing the scheme of Von Hindenburg, have rigged up a surprise for him and the German navy in the Baltic.

So great a supremacy has General Sir Stanley Maude and the British forces in Mesopotamia established over the Turks that they are beginning to flee almost at the British approach, as just signified at Istabulat. The enemy has retired four miles back to another position six miles below Samara after the British had taken a portion of the Istabulat position, being unwilling to face the British assault. The rapid success of General Maude in Mesopotamia, together with the menace of the British advance in Syria, promises startling results in the near future.

In the patrol fighting which marked the operations between the heavy engagement at Vimy ridge and the big action of yesterday, the Canadians advanced their lines to an average depth of 4000 yards, or nearly two miles and a half. This advance, which is a fine one, indeed, does not attract nearly so much notice as it would have attracted a year ago, or even six months ago. It is sandwiched between more exciting events.
