home by a husband, who earned thirteen shillings a week)—suppose such a sum to be brought home as the whole amount of the week's earnings. Upon whom, I ask, should the blame be laid? upon those who manage public affairs, or upon the father of the family?

And now for a few more words about transmutation. Have you ever seen a London gin-shop? There is, perhaps, no statelier shop in the magnificent chief city of England. No expense seems to be spared in the building and furnishing of a gin-shop.

Not many years ago, a gin-shop was a mean looking, and by no means a spacious place, with a few small bottles, not bigger than a doctor's largest vials, in the dusty window. However poor
