After dinner Hillen alleges that they had not sufficient money for the day, and an examination of jewelry was resorted to.

LONELY GRAVES DECORATED BY KIND AND LOVING FRIENDS

Annual Decoration of the Sailors "God's Acre" in Fernhill Carried Out This Afternoon by the Seamen's Missionary Society.

The first annual decoration day will be observed by the Seamen's Missionary Society this afternoon, when a number of the workers and friends of the organization will leave the old Chapman house at 2:30 o'clock with a barouche or two filled with beautiful flowers, and proceed to the marine lot in Fernhill cemetery, where, after a short service, they will be placed in memory of the departed seamen.

A great deal of interest has been manifested in the scheme by citizens generally, which is evidenced by the large number of flowers that have been donated by the society's friends residing in the city, as well as a large number located at the various summer resorts.

The old Chapman house presented a busy appearance last night when the workers of the society, assisted by the seamen, prepared the flowers, which will be arranged in the centre of the lot.

Roses, carnations, sweet peas, nasturtiums and other varieties are in abundance, and have been arranged in bouquets of various sizes and affixed to small pointed white "which will be driven into the ground."

A large floral anchor will be placed in the centre, over which will be placed the words "St. John."

The marine lot covers an acre of ground, and was donated by Mrs. G. Corbett, arranged for by Her Late Majesty Queen Victoria, and is to the seamen

PROBATE COURT. An Interesting Question Came Up at Today's Session of this Court.

The last will of the late William Hazelhurst was admitted to probate today, and letters testamentary were granted to his son, Joseph W. Hazelhurst, the executor named in the will. The estate is valued at $200 real and $200 personal. Barhill, Esq., being auditors.

In the hearing and passing of the accounts in the estate of Hiram F. Finley an interesting question arose as to the right of the city of St. John to claim payment of taxes out of the personal property of a deceased person.

It was contended by Recorder Saines that the amount of the taxes was to be divided and therefore took priority over other debts, and consequently should be paid in full.
