When the older man appeared the younger confronted him with an ultimatum. Would he or would he not allow him to marry the girl without more delay? The father repeated firmly what he had so often said before, namely, that the lover could wait. The young man, with a still smoking revolver in his hand, was standing close to the corpse of his victim, who had been shot through the heart.

He was promptly arrested and taken off to the gendarmerie, where, on being searched, he was found to have $400 on him, all ready for the marriage, if only he had obtained the consent of the girl's father. As for the young man, as she has lost her fath-
