NURSE AGATHA'S LOVE.

A group of three grown-up people and one hitle girl were seated at a side table during the luncheon hour of a fashionable hotel in the North of England. Judging from the merriment that proceeded from this particular table these four, though only acquaintances of a fortnight, seemed on a particularly friendly footing with each other. Now one was a fine-looking man, certainly past the prime of life, but still erect and soldierly in bis carriage, and with the un-mistakable bearings and manners of a gen-timm. By bis side sat a tair, slight young girl, with laughter-loving eyes, clear, fresh complexion, and a wealth of glorious, sunny hair surrounding the head like a nalo. Next to her came a dain'y little maiden of about seven, and opposite the trio sat a sedate-looking Scotch lawyer, quick and abropt of speech, with a merry twinkle in the unusually bright eyes thrt showed he could be genial and merry enough when he chose.

chose. "This year, next year, sometime, never. This year,' commenced the child in her de-licerate httle fashion, as she ticked off the noerate ittle iashion, as she ticked off this stones on her companion's plate. 'So you have finished at last, Yscult Then we will go and see it mamma is bet ter and would like to take her drive.' But Colonel Arbuthnot qui tly inter fered.

tered. 'Oh, not just yet, Miss Excombe; do let us know what the fates have in store for you; please let Yscult go on with her for-tune: elling.' Bat the girl answered, gravely enough: 'Do you know, I never allow myself to thiak of love or marriage; such luxuries are for girls who have fathers, mothers, and a home already, and not for outsiders and wanderers like myself.'

'But you are altogether so different, ommenced both gentlemen, simultane vleuc

A grave, negative shake of the head was all the answer the girl gave, as, taking the child by the hand, she quietly left the table

The two gentlemen were immediately joined by a fine looking young fellow, a late comer to the hotel, whose acquaintance they made the previous evening at the bill-iard table they made iard-table. "Who is she?" he asked, glancing esger-ly at the attracting figures. "A Miss E-combe from London." "And the child?" "Her pupl." "Then sh. is only a governess?" With a sight, dry litle cough, the law-yer answered : 'Yes, chly a governess: "What a pity." The quick ears of the law-yer caught the words, and he looked up-quietly at his companion.

yer caught the words, and he looked up-quietly at bis companion. "The pil was right, you tee, after all. Love and marriage are not for her. And yet, what a sweet face it is,' he continued, halt musingly. In my opinion the nicest girl in the place. "And as good as she is beautiful, I am quite sure,' answered the colonel as he rose to leave the table.

His Wish.

'Three or four hours at the most, I fancy But there will be no more pain, thank God?'
A look of reli-t passed over her face, but she crossed theiroom and took her uval low seat at the window without a word.
'Three or four hours at the most.' What did that mean to her? She tried to 'pray, but the words would not come. If she could only cry out or pace the room with burried steps to relieve her. But no-she would not disturb the worn, languid form she loved so much, and the agony must be fought out and conquered silently. A movement from the sick man made her look up; he seemed wide awake now, and was looking at her a'most withully.'
'Will you read something?' he asked, giving a glance at the Bible which lay at his side.' Oaly don't choose anything; read just where you open. Perhaps it will arswer what I want to know so mucq.'
She took up the book and commenced : 'For in Heaven they nither marry nor are given in marriage.' The choking senation was too much for her this ime. She closed the book hurriedly, but he did not seem to notice that she had done so; he lay with closed eyes, repeating the words slowly and softly to himself. Presently he spoke again, and this time his voice was clear and distinct.
'Do you know, as you have sat there
