DON'T GIVE UP

The use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. One bottle may not cure "rigid" cases, but a course of years' treatment is effected. As a general rule, improvement follows shortly after beginning the use of this medicine. With many people, the effect is immediately noticeable, but some constitutions are susceptible to medicinal influences than others, and the curative process may, therefore, in such cases, be less prompt. Persistence in using this remedy is sure of its reward at last. Sooner or later, the most stubborn blood diseases yield to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For several years, in the spring months, I used to be troubled with a rowdy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so bad, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least motion causing me severe distress. I consulted several physicians, but they did not give me any relief. I began to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my blood was thoroughly eradicated. I am now well, and my skin is clear and of a healthy hue. I tried various remedies, but while some of them gave me temporary relief, none of them did any permanent good. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, continuing it exclusively for a considerable time, and am pleased to say that it completely

Cured Me.

I presume my liver was very much out of order, and the blood impure in consequence. I feel that I cannot too highly recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla to any one afflicted as I was.—Mrs. W. A. Smith, Dover, N. H.

"For years I suffered from scrofula and blood diseases. The doctors' prescriptions and several localised blood-purifiers being of no avail, I was at last advised by a friend to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I feel like a new man, being fully restored to health."—C. N. Frink, Decorah, Iowa.

DR. KEENE'S STORY.

Frank Howard was one of my most intimate friends. I met him one summer in the Catskills, whither I had been taken myself for a week's change and fresh air. I put at a lonely farm house where Howard, stopping for a day to await the arrival of some friends was so unfortunate as to sprain his ankle. It was nothing serious, but it compelled him to remain quiet for a few days. His friends, arriving, proceeded on their way, leaving him in my care.

Frank was a cheery, happy young fellow of 20, and took his mishap with uncommon good grace. I read to him from my store of books and papers, and we had long and interesting talks. Frank was full of the enthusiasm of youth, and I, eight or ten years his senior, was my steady good colleague would have said, a visionary, romantic boy. Those few days made us better acquainted than we would have become in months of intercourse in the city. When Frank was able to rejoin his friends my time was up and I returned to town regretting the necessity that compelled me to part with the pleasant young fellow.

He did not forget his promise to look me up when he returned to the city, and from that time on we were the best of friends. I had, I am sure, more of his confidence than did any one else, and I talked to him in a way that my medical brethren would have pronounced wild and unprofessional, but he took it in so good a sense, no matter how wild, believing in my theories just because I aired them.

My friend was a good looking young fellow, tall, well made as to figure, easy and graceful. He had blue gray eyes, a well shaped brow and rounded chin, dark hair which, however, was quite thin, giving promise of early baldness, a nose perhaps a trifle too long and an upper lip a trifle too short. His front teeth though white, were not well shaped. Greatly to my sorrow he could not raise a moultache, try hard as he might, and he had tried very hard, indeed, investing nearly a dollar in nostrums warranted to produce the desired result.

Frank well knew what an improvement a moultache would be—he did not hanker after whiskers, a moultache was all he wanted—for he wore false ones on several occasions when taking part in private theatricals. He was quite clever and played very well for an amateur, but often accepted a part, I verily believe, more for the opportunity it gave him to wear a moultache than for any other reason.

His parents were dead. His father had left him a good business, which, however, had so far demanded little of his attention, a shrewd steady bachelor, with near him, who was devoted to the young man. Considerable property outside of the business added a good deal to his income. Like myself he had few relatives, but then he had hosts of friends and was a great favorite in society. There were plenty of nice girls who would have become Mrs. Howard—one at a time of course—had he asked them, none but his lack of one as he did, and none but I knew how he felt about it.

We had been discussing various experiments one evening when he had dropped in as he often did, on his way to a reception. After a silence of some moments evidently spent in deep thought, for he had not seemed to hear one or two of my remarks Frank broke out:

"See here, doctor, can't you transplant a bit of some one's scalp on my lip and make a moultache that will grow? I read or told me something once, evening about such an experiment, and I dreamed it. I have been wanting to speak to you about it. I'd gladly spare some of my own scalp if the hair on it wasn't so awfully thin. I'll give you a thousand dollars if you can manage it and pay all expenses. Think it over and see if there isn't some way to do it, and now I must be off. Good night, old boy!"

I laughed at the idea, but after he had gone I could not help thinking about it. A thousand dollars was certainly tempting. My practice did not increase so rapidly as I could have wished, and of course, I had married a nice girl who scarcely able to keep myself comfortably and the tiny olive branches had a dreadful way, sweet as they were, of appearing all too frequently for a poor man. I'm not saying that you that I've ever regretted my marriage or been willing to spare one of the boys and girls now growing up so fast around me but money was very scarce in those days and a thousand dollars seemed too much to let go without some effort to earn it.

I did a lot of hard thinking for a few days and spent all my spare time over some old books in a musty, out of the way library down town. I finally told Frank that I would see what could be done if he would give $500, the rest I succeeded in the undertaking. He agreed at once, so I put a carefully worded "Want" in The Herald, offering $500 for a bit of scalp from the head of a healthy person, a young woman preferred, and naming an hour for applicants to call at my office.

Well, I had a good many answers, in person and by letter. The letters I paid no attention to, and those who called I did not see, until I began to think I would have a good deal of trouble to find the right person, when my small boy of all work usher in a young lady. I knew that she was young, though she was heavily veiled, by her slight, girlish figure and low, sweet, tremulous voice. Her dress was neat and plain and fitted exquisitely. Her gloves and boots were new, but they were gloves and boots of a lady. Wavy dark brown hair was worn in a heavy coil beneath a little round hat, and I thought "Here's the very girl at last!"

I questioned her closely, and explained to her more fully than to the others just what I wanted. She was nervous, as was quite natural, but had evidently from my mind to win the $500 if possible. She was perfectly healthy, she said, so far as she knew, came of healthy parents. Her father was dead. Her mother was usually quite well, though not very strong. She was just now suffering from injuries received in a fall on the stairs.

"The doctor says," the young lady went on, "that my mother will soon be as well as ever, but we need money very badly at present. On account of my mother's illness I lost my position in—that is, I am out of employment, and as I am the breadwinner for our family, I am willing to do anything honorable that will not injure my health to earn money. I must stipulate that my face shall remain covered, and that no effort will be
