This is the Brit great step towards.

In the Convent School. As I was much toe early took a walk round the grounds. Tables were placed on one side of the yard in front of the Chapel, where women had already begun to sell refreshments. The tables were shaded by evergreen bushes, and it was delightful to sit at them out of the sun. I think was delightful to sit at them out of the sun. I think the bands tempted people to sit down quite as much as the aight of the good things of which there was no scarcity. I then walked up to the Convent. On the platform outside of the building an arbour was erected, formed of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which was a short of evergreens, along the sides of which there was no scarcity.

The children acquitted themselves wonderfully well. Donald, J Thornton. 2nd prize, S Boudreault, M It was a pretty sight to see so many children all dressed in white. What astonished me most was the absence of embarrassment among the scholars. They seemed as much at ease as if they were repeating their lessons to each other. The English lessons certainly were well said. In Geography the Convent pupils particularly excel; and if I were to judge by the readiness of their answers, I should say they were not at all inferior. Some of the scholars are abset to leave the Convent. They seemed to be very corry to leave their lively schoolmates and their kind teachers.—S. Journal.

This Report having been adopted, the officers took their places, and the Convention proceeded to the despatch of business. As an elaborate report of the proceedings of the Convention is to be published at an early day, and circulated throughout the country, it is unnecessary, in this place, to give any extended outline of such proceedings. Owing to the multiplicity of matters requiring attention, members were prohabited from speaking more than twice on one question, and h different minds have given to the gra lion in its various aspects.
