SUCCESSFUL EXPERIMENTS
FRANCE.

The physician, Dr. Kurt Gerson, of Berlin, claims to have discovered a cure for tuberculosis, which he called anti-phthisin, and consists of a fluid which is injected into the muscles of the body. The cure does not entail any change in the ordinary mode of living nor any interruption of occupation, and if it proves to be effective will be a cheap and popular method of curing consumption.

The treatment is quite painless and is claimed to result in the regeneration of the patient's blood. There is intense interest in scientific circles in Paris by a seminar claim set up at the Academy of Medicine to the effect that a means of preventing the development of consumption has at last been discovered. The announcement was made by Dr. Albert Calmette, the assistant director of the Pasteur Institute, in the name of himself and six of his scientific collaborators, who give the results of over twenty years' research into the mechanism of the inception and the role of infection in the evolution of tuberculosis.

Professor Calmette stated that his experiment had been made on calves, and finally with infants born in homes contaminated with consumption. The results attained in making tests to protect newly-born children against tuberculosis by the use of vaccine, which has been called V.C.C., have been constantly favorable. None of the 176 babies who were vaccinated during the first part of 1923 has died from any tuberculosis or presumed tubercular infection. Ninety-four of the infants thus vaccinated were examined last month and all were found in perfect health.

Girl Sacrificed to Goddess Kali

The sacrifice of a girl to the goddess Kali has been revealed in a story which concluded recently at Jubahpore, in the Central Provinces of India.

The favorite son of a former Government servant was taken ill, and his family, believing him to be possessed of an evil spirit, decided that a human sacrifice was the only means to cure him. The blood of the victim, who on bread, was to be taken to a place occupied by a holy man.

A girl was sacrificed to Kali by the boy's malady showed no improvement, he was starved, and eventually bound and deposited naked during bitter weather in the open near a holy man, where he died from exposure.

The father of the boy and two of his sons were sentenced to death and a woman relative to transportation for life.

Kali, who in Hindu mythology is the wife of Shiva, is a bloodthirsty goddess, who is represented with a necklace of human skulls round her neck. She is the tutelary deity of the Thugs. Calcutta derives its name from her.

Wizards of Lapland
and Orkney Witches

The art of tying up the wind in three knots, so that the more knots are loosed the stronger will be the wind, has been attributed to wizards in Lapland and to witches in Orkney, Lewis and the Isle of Man. Shipboard seamen still buy winds in the shape of knotted handkerchiefs or threads from old women who claim to ride the storms. Sir Walter Scott visited one of these witches at Stromness in the Orkneys. He says: "We climb, by steep and narrow lanes, an eminence rising above the town, and commanding a fine view. An old hag lives in a witch's cottage on this height, and subsists by selling winds. Each captain of a merchantman, between jest and earnest, gives the old woman sixpence, and she boils her kettle to procure a draught of gale. She was a miserable figure, upwards of 90, she told us, and dried up like a mummy. A bag of clay-colored cloak, folded over her head, corresponded in color to her corpse-colored complexion. From light-blue eyes, and nose and chin that almost met, and a ghastly expression of cunning, gave her the effect of Hecate."

A Norwegian witch has boasted of sinking a ship by opening a bag of which she had shut up the wind.
