guilt of a crime which he knew you had not committed. At any time during the twenty subsequent years he could have relieved you of your weight of misery, yet he did not."

"Most true, my chill," said Bidgenorth, "I thought I knew daequin's saide volent nature well, but I have found now there is something more and worse than malevolence in it. But it is useless to speculate on these things now. Let us wait and see the meaning of this dreadful outrage. Situated as we are, we can do nothing else. Let us be calm and indignant, and show our enemies, whoever they are, that we have courage and self-relience."

they are, that we have courage and self-relipne."

"But, oh, father," faltered Helen,
"every hour is taking us farther away from Ardenadam, and we know not whither we are going."

"By morning," he returned, "we shall surely know all. Till then let us be as patient as we can. Try to sleep, my child, for you need repose. Do not fear to be stolen upon in slumber, for I will keep watch. The broad cushions which have been put there are evidently meant to serve for couches, and—ha! here are provisions. At least they do not mean to starve us."

starve us.

A little table which stood at the narrow and dark end of the cabin had been over looked till now; but Bridgenorth having approached it, found that upon it an ample supper had been spread. Two plates were heaped with slices of boiled meat; another plate held a leaf of white head; while water and wine shoul in separate vessels.

And so the dark hours of the summer night wore away in this cris is of suspense. —the vessel all the while holding on her course, as they knew by the continual motion, and by the murmur of the water rippling by her side. Quietness now reigned on deck. An occasional footstep could be heard slowly pacing the planks, but no voice broke the stillness. All on board had evidently gone to repose, save those who were left to guide the motions of the ship.

BREAKFAST—EFFS'S COCOA — GRATEFUL and COMPORTING.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestionand nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine preperties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately favored beverage which may save us many heavy doctor folls.—Civil S.—ice Gazette. "Come, my child," said Bridgenorth, leading Helento the table. "It is obvious they do not mean to come near its to-night, and our strength and courage are not to be maintained by fasting. Come and try to eat-yomething."

Helen sat down, but eat she could not. She, however, drank a glass of wine, and felt revived by it.

Bridgenorth was less abstemious, Being more angry than alarmed, his anger had not quite taken awas his appetite, and hee partook heartily of the food which had been set for them, finishing his meal with several glasses of wine, which he found to be of a superior description.

At her father's carnest request, Helen also lay down on one of the cashinous which lined the sides of the cabin, but sleep was out of the question. Her agitating thoughts and forebodings effectually served to banish slumber from hypercyclids.
