WORDS THAT BURN.

WEAVING.

My life is but a weaving Between my God and me; I may but choose the colors— He worketh steadily. Full oft he weaveth sorrow; And I in foolish pride, Forget he sees the upper, And I the under side!

I choose the strands all golden, And watch for woven stars; I murmur when the pattern Is set in blurs or mars, I cannot yet remember Whose hands the shuttle guide: And that my stars are shining Upon the upper side.

I choose my strands all crimson, For warp and woof to blossom Upon that mighty loom. Full oft I seek them vainly, Though flowering wreaths and garlands May deck the upper side!

My life is but a weaving Upon the upper side.

JUDGE NOT. Judge not; the workings of his brain And of his heart thou canst not see; What looks to thy dim eyes a stain, In God's pure sight may only be A scar brought from some well-fought field, Where thou wouldst only faint and yield.

The look, the air that frets thy sight, May be a token that below.

May be a token that below.

The soul has closed in deadly fight

With some infernal deadly foe,

Whose glance would scorch thy smiling grace.

And cast thee shuddering on thy face!

The fall thou darest to despise— Maybe the angel's slackened han Has suffered it, that he may rise And take a firmer, surer, stand; Or, trusting less to earthly things, May henceforth learn to use his wings. And judge none lost; but wait and see,

With hope and rity, not disdain; The depth of the abyss may be The measure of the height of pain And love and glory that may raise
This soul to God in after days!

Discipline.

The true so obeys orders faithfully, no matter at what sacrifice. A company of a British regiment was once sent on some duty, in time of peace, to a remote village in Ireland, and left there for several weeks, quite separate from its usual base of supplies.

During this period some general orders, applicable more especially to men in barracks, were sent to the commander of the company. One clause of those words was as follows:

racks, were sent to the commander of the company. One clause of those words was as follows:

"All men in the command shall change their shirts at least twice a week."

The captain gave orders to the orderly sergeant to see this command put into execution.

"But, captain," said the sergeant "there's "But, captain," said the sergeant "there's only a shirt apiece to every man in the company. How can they—"
"Silence," exclaimed the captaint "orders are orders, sergeant. Let the men change shirts with one another."

So the sergeant saw to it that, as long as the company remained in the place, on every Sundar and Wednesday morning the soldiers swapped shirts with one

A Miracle.

A Miracle.

This story about Pope Pius IX. is told by the Pall Mall Gazette. He granted an audience to a French lady of high station, who threw herself at his feet and devouily thanked him for the restoration of her health. "But how have I done it?" inquired the Pope. "I procured a stocking that belonged to your holiness," she replied. "One of my stockings?" "Yes, I put the talisman on my diseased toot, and it has been completely cured." "Madame," replied the Pope, a little maliciously, "fortune has been very kind to you. You need only put on one of my stockings and your foot is healed, while I put on both my stockings every morning, and I can hardly walk."

A Curious Fact.

A Curious Fact.

The wild horses that roamed over Europe in immense herds appear to have furnished the chief food of early man in Europe. Enormous refuse heaps, consisting mainly of the bones of wild horses, have been found outside the caves, as in those at the foot of Mount Pellegrino, near Palermo, where the floor is formed of a magma of the bones if wild horses, which were either stalked with spears, driven by the hunters into pit-falls, or chased over the cilifs. Similiar deposits have been found at the cave of Thayngen in Switzerland, and in front of the rock shelter at Solutre, near Macon, where there is a vast deposit, the relies of the feasts of these savages, nearly 10 feet in thickness, and more than 30 feet in length, composed entirely of the bones of horses, and comprising the remains of from 20,000 to 40,000 individuals. bones of horses, and comprising the remains of from 20,000 to 40,000 individuals.

Always Ready.

Suwaroff, Russia's great military commander, was a little man, insignificant in everything but that intangible power of mind and character with which physical strength is never to be compared. He had been sickly in his youth, but became hardy under the stimulus of cold bathing and the benefits of a plain dict. Buckets of cold water were thrown over him in the morning, and his table was moving with a piercing cock-orow, in commendation of early rising.

During the first Polish war he had given orders for an attack at cock-crow, and a spy in the camp carried the news to the enemy. The attack, however, really took place at 9 o'clock on the evening when the arrangement had been made, for Suwaroff, suspecting treachery, had then turned out the troops by his well-known crowing.

The enemy, expecting the event in the morning, were entirely unprepared, and fell easy victims to his forethought.

"To-morrow morning," said he to his troops on the evening before the storming of Ismail," an hour before daybreak, I mean to get up. I shall wash and dress myself, say my prayers, give one good cock-crow, and then capture Ismail."

It was hardly possible to find him off the alert.

Fly or Bait-The Fly Less Cruel.

Fly or Bait—The Fly Less Cruel.

The advantages of the fly are obvious enough. It is always ready, bait must be procured for each occasion. "I wish," said a lady one day, "that you would teach my husband to use a fly, for I observe that when you desire o go a fishing, you go; but he raises the whole village for four days to collect his baits. "Besides it is a gratification to avoid giving pain, even if slight, to living bait. A still greater practical advantage is that the fly does not mortally and any fish, and such as (by reason of r for any other cause) are not wanted obasket, may be returned to the water marmed. Unharmed? Probably entirely so. In bait fishing many an undesired fish is basketed because wounds of its gills or gullet makes its survival improbable if it were returned to the water. But a fly is not swallowed unless a bait has been added to it. It goes no further than the mouth, and—by trout at least—is instantly recognized as a deception, and if it has not been fastened at the moment of seizure, is immediately rejected. That the presence of a hook in the mouth of predatory fish causes little, if any pain, becomes more probable the more their behavior is watched. Their mouths being their only prehensile apparatus, we should expect these parts to be but slightly sensitive to pain, and such seems from observation to be really the case. Such fish often seize and swallow others so protected with spines that the angler handles them with great caution. Most anglers of experience have seen a fish take a fly repeatedly, or take a second while still struggling to be really the case.

For experiment's sake, the writer once caught, unhooked, and returned to the water the same trout four times within a few minutes (it being plainly visible all the time), and finally drove it out of the pool with a stick lest it should swallow the bait and be destroyed if it were allowed another opportunity.—[From "Getting Out the Fly Books," by Dr. Leroy M. Yale, in the Jur Scribner.

People who give Heed's Sarsaparilla a fair trial realize its great merit and are glad to say a good word for it. Have you tried it!
