portry. THE SAILOR BOY.

I saw him midway up the mast, That fair and gallant boy, His gold hair streaming in the blast, His blue eyes light ning up ward cast, In bright and tourless joy.

Po young, so lovely, and so free He look'd, and proud and wild, Methought earth never show'd to me, A sight before, on land or sea, Like that lone, dauntless child !

O life! how beautiful art thou, When pure and happy youth Sits throned upon a nuble brow, And beams in eyes that disayow All thoughts but thoughts of truth !

Again I saw bim : on the shore That sailor boy lay cold; Fall's from the mast into the rear Of raging waves, his course was o'er, The young, the bright, the bold !
