A new industry which might with advantage be introduced into this country, is described in a recent number of Chambers' Journal. In all angling localities, the merits of Nottingham worms for angling purposes are fully recognized, but comparatively few people are aware of the trouble that is expended upon them. This industry affords employment to a large number of persons throughout a considerable part of the year, who, every avorable night, collected the worms from their happpy hunting grounds in the meadows. Naturally the supply in wet weather is more abundant than when the atmosphere is dry, although some sort of harvest can even then be obtained by watering the ground. The wormers are provided with lanterns, and have to exercise some considerable in red and bordered with the same color.
