

of life. Here you find another campus. Three dormitories form a half circle and in the centre lies the Refectory. Facing the four is the Students' Recitation Hall and to its left is the Millar Chapel.

And now you begin to throw off that feeling of lonesomeness, for the spirit of the place is becoming more lively and each train brings its contingent of students old and new. The boys are very friendly and willing to give advice. You will have to get a room but they see that the janitor puts you up for the night and to-morrow there will be a drawing of rooms by the Juniors, the Seniors and Middlers having drawn at the close of last Session. Meanwhile you look into your temporary quarters and find a bed with a bare mattress. You will have to provide your own bed-clothes and stove for your room, for that is the only means of heating rooms in Princeton.

You have read in the catalogue that board is furnished for three dollars a week at the Refectory, but owing to difficulties, known in other places as well as Princeton, this plan has been discarded and the building is soon to be turned into a gymnasium. On the bulletin you read that board is to be had at certain places for three dollars a week, and as it is supper time, you betake yourself to one of these houses and find the table surrounded with students. Your new friends make you acquainted and you sit down, but before the meal is over, you have made up your mind that there is worse board to be had than certain places in Montreal attempt to furnish. However, you have seen the worst side of Princeton and it is not long before you learn their better customs. The students have formed clubs, each with their own title. There are Friars, Benhams, Southern, Socialist, Calvin and others. You may be invited to join several but you take your choice influenced greatly by your impressions of the boys in each club. Board in these runs from three to four dollars. The same system of clubs prevails throughout the University and takes the place of the Greek Letter Societies which are strictly forbidden by the Faculty.

Choosing a room is the next difficulty and you go to the Office and get a list of the vacant rooms in the different
