

	PAGE
"The Lieutenant tied round their necks," . . . . .	242
"Hobson was in dismay," . . . . .	242
"The wolves came within musket range," . . . . .	240
"We knew it, sir!" . . . . .	252
"It was a Polar bear," . . . . .	257
"Two large waggon sledges were built," . . . . .	258
"Some of the icebergs assumed extraordinary forms," . . . . .	262
"We must pass somehow," . . . . .	263
"Marbre flung his running noose skilfully," . . . . .	269
"Everybody started back," . . . . .	272
"It was dashed upon the ice-field with a fearful crash," . . . . .	277
"I think it is time to retrace our steps," . . . . .	278
"It is a frost-rime," . . . . .	288
"He took the altitude," . . . . .	288
"When an unexpected noise," . . . . .	293
"It was like an army of icebergs," &c., . . . . .	293
"Poor things! poor things!" . . . . .	300
"And a figure appeared," &c., . . . . .	301
"Examining the state of the sea," &c., . . . . .	307
"Mrs Barnett sobbed aloud," . . . . .	309
"The lower framework was already floating," . . . . .	310
"He escaped with a ducking," . . . . .	312
"The embarkation of provisions, &c., had to be put off," . . . . .	318
"He tightened them," &c., . . . . .	319
"Mrs Barnett turned and looked Madge full in the face," . . . . .	324
"A beam . . . was sunk deep into the earth," &c., . . . . .	329
"The colonists, falling on their knees, returned thanks to God," . . . . .	332
Kalumah and the bear, . . . . .	334