Dear names, loved comrades o'er the death-strewn fields are calling,

For those who'll ne'er return?
There's comfort in this thought, that those for whom we're weeping
Doth not a Nation mourn?

Long dwell upon the ear;
With pained and nerveless clutch from weary hand is falling
The shattered sword and spear.

Night's dewy veil mantles his whitened brow, whereon It doth a mirror seem;
The radiant glories of the Southern Cross, thereon
In placid beauty gleam.
