ON MAKING GOOD

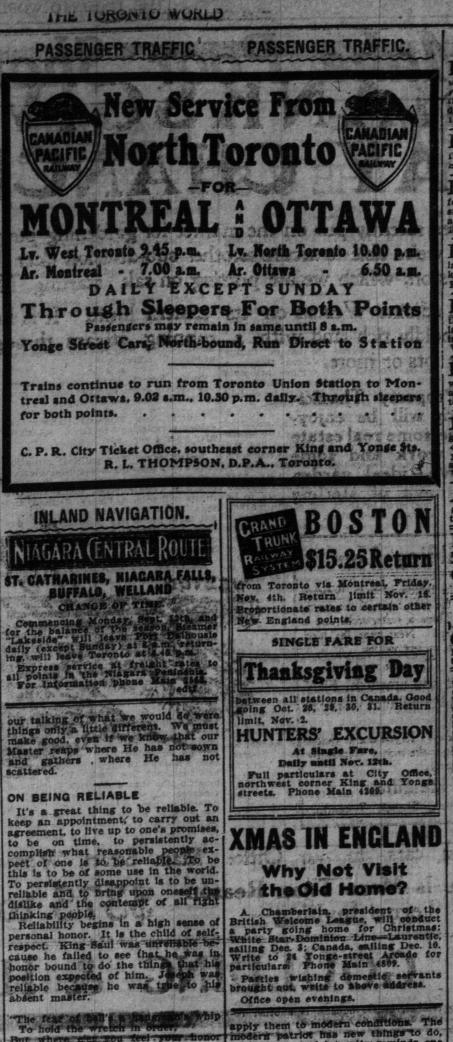

ON MAKING GOOD It's the person who makes good that founts. It doesn't matter much what or is occupation is if he wants to count he must make good. "The lawyer who wins most cases is the best wayer," wise old Oliver Mowat used to say. He might have added, "It's the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-forces the best legislation who is the politician who initiates and who an-the best statesman." Whether one's busi-ness is making shoes or making sermons, sweeping up the store, or building takes us but a little way. The whork of at least one that avails. Fault inding takes us but a little way. The who hever made a mistake never made anything. Refinement is all very while but if the delicate nostril and the well, but if the delicate nostril and the dainty finger keep one aloof from the world's work, refinement is a curse. To criticize those who are doing their level best to make that world better is to hold fellowship with the apes that chatter at travelers in fronci forests. No, one must make good. Religion is a poor thing if it is all in one's wife's name. It is a still poorer thing if it issue in no enthusiasms or in no service vell, but if the delicate nostril and th self. At once he entered a suit against the paper that made his contesson pub-ile property. This good man evidently did not mean to be taken seriously. So, too, it is with a deal of our political scandal mongering. If our country and society were as near the bow wows as some would have us believe, neither the scandal monger nor we would live in it. It is Edmund Burke who laughs at such alarmists by comparing them to the noisy, useless, destructive grass-hoppers who make the day hideous while the useful oxen lie quietly beneath the British oak and chew the cud. Everywhere we have men who love their kind and who hold open the door whereby others may enter upon a share of life's good things. Examples of self-denying service abound. The message of those who cultivate alarm and discouragement should be carefully weighed. The politician who drags a bit of an opponent's dirty linen into light amid yells of delight, may have an axe to grind. It is the crow or the vulture who are drawn with noisy clamor to the decaying carcases in the landscape, but the statesman and prophet see therein the field wherein men work out their destiny. Greediness and meanness never have conquered for long, but love never fails. less never have conquer for long, but love never fails. AND IN CONTACT BUT NOT CONFLICT For a long time it was customary speak of the conflict between science and religion. No one thinks of suc a thing nowadays for there can be no more conflict between science an ieligion than there can be between religion than there can be between religion and navigation or agricultur fields and the creator and all H works. Solence is simply accura knowledge. It, too, is an attitude of the mind toward everything that may known or thought about. How, the can there be any conflict between the toos. She Oliver Lodge, one of the greatest of living scientists, is preacher, while many ministers has achieved high success in the pursuit art and science. The old attitude ministers and acientists was that mutual suspicion. The new attitude art and science. The old attitude of ministers and scientists was that of mutual suspicion. The new attitude is sympathetic and mutually respectful. Truth is the object sought after by both science and religion, and in this pursuit, each finds the other its hand-modern patrict has new things to but his personal integrity reminds o of Cato, of Isaish and of Pitt in t ioftiness of their motives, their, se sacrifice and their cardinal virtue. I longer can a nation follow the lead whose working maxim is, "My count right or wrong," but the leader wi says "My country must win by in telligence and righteousness." The ne statesman resards anything that in jures another nation as being hurtin to his own, his outlook being interna-tional rather than provincial. He see clearly, that if, our present civilization is to aurvive that each man and nation must serve according to his ability and render te every man according to his need.
